GROWING YOUR BUSINESS'S BOTTOM LINE.

Innovation has always been at the heart of the J.R. Simplot Company. And with our new high-grade OneUP™ liquid fertilizer, that commitment to constant improvement has been brought to a whole new level in a better nutrient blend.

No other fertilizer on the market combines the same advanced technologies. OneUP™ is both a plant stimulant and soil builder, rich in low salt liquid and featuring advanced photosynthesis and nutrient uptake technologies. The proprietary nutrient blend will help producers boost yields – and profitability.

Welcome to Idaho

Idaho's seed is grown under the same environmental conditions that make Idaho potatoes famous. The history of Idaho seed growers producing quality seed is the very foundation of the Idaho potato industry. For many generations Idaho growers have produced quality seed potato crops in areas like these.

YaraLiva® calcium nitrate products improve plant health, tuber yield, size and quality.

YaraLiva premium calcium nitrate supplies nitrate nitrogen to help the plant develop a strong canopy and to increase the uptake of calcium, potassium, and magnesium. Calcium is a key element in plant cell structure, cell membrane function, and is critical during cell division. The result is higher yields of quality tubers with less culls.

2018 Keynote

Paul Mobley: The Future of Small Farms

Paul Mobley is an award-winning photographer who has traveled the world over to capture and celebrate humanity. Firmly grounded by his Midwestern roots, Mobley's early training as a photographer began at Detroit's Center for Creative Studies, and continued in the New York studios of such leading photographers as Annie Leibovitz, Steve Steigman, and David Langley, where he apprenticed for many years before embarking on his own career. Since then, Mobley has successfully worked with a broad range of corporate, advertising, and editorial clients including American Express, Sony, Max Factor, Microsoft and many others.

In 2005 Paul set out to capture the soul of rural America. Traveling across the country Mobley and his camera were welcomed time and again into the homes of over three hundred farm families, who graciously shared their personal histories and private thoughts, along with the fruits of their labor. Visit after visit, Mobley came to know the independent farmer's spirit from both behind the lens and across the dinner table. The result, American Farmer: The Heart of Our Country, won the 2009 Western Heritage award for "best photography book" from the National Cowboy and Western Heritage Museum.

In Paul's presentations, he shares photographs and tells the stories behind the pictures of America's unsung heroes. From Walter Jackson, a 104-year-old Florida citrus farmer; to Patsy Fribley, a stockyard dealer from Montana; to Aaron Bell, a young 9th generation organic dairy farmer in Maine, Mobley's exquisite photographs and narrative reveal the true face of American farming and remind us what it means to live with simplicity, contentment, and decency in a world that so often forgets.

EXCEPTIONAL QUALITY SEED POTATOES SINCE 1960.

Our isolated northern location along with our group of 10 experienced growers have been producing exceptional seed potatoes with increased energy and the lowest possible disease levels for over 50 years.

Our longevity and historical performance have made us a valued resource and seed potato supplier to growers across North America and the world.

With over 100 varieties including main crop and specialty selections, we invite you to give us a call to discuss how we can help you make this growing season the best one yet.

Tax Reform Takes Center Stage

By John Keeling, NPC Vice President and CEO

As the number of legislative days in 2017 dwindles, Congress and the White House have turned their attention to achievable critical public policy issues, the foremost of which involves reforming our outdated tax code. The potato industry along with our allies throughout agriculture are working to ensure that this effort includes a permanent estate tax repeal, preservation of stepped-up basis, depreciation rules that encourage investment and a lower rate for both corporations and individuals.

Though these proposals seem to be common-sense, major tax reform hasn't occurred in the last 30 years. The challenge of coming to a bipartisan consensus on how our country collects your tax dollars has proven too great for the last four presidents and the Congresses they worked with. This is due, in part, to the increasing polarization between the two parties. This polarization is particularly strong when it comes to positions on the "fairness" of tax policy.

What is clear is that this administration is squarely focused on making this attempt successful. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, Secretary of Agriculture Sonny Perdue and a host of other officials have been diligently working to develop a package and a message that can span the widening aisle of partisan congressional politics. This occurs as the recent inability to enact an alternative to the Affordable Care Act is still fresh in people's minds and provides a reality check on how difficult the path to success can be.

Optimistically, both sides acknowledge that modernizing our tax code can jumpstart a sluggish economy. As part of that modernization effort, Republicans and Democrats can agree on certain items. There is a general consensus that our current tax system encourages international companies to keep their profits overseas rather than repatriating them and that the current corporate tax rate is not competitive internationally and needs to be reduced. Both parties voice support for lowering the burden on lower- and middle-class taxpayers individually. With those common goals providing a base of support, congressional leadership and the administration seek to build a coalition that gets to the magic number of votes in both the House and Senate to put a bill on President Donald Trump's desk. In late September, the "Big Six" took a first step toward that goal as they released an outline for tax reform that addressed some of our priorities. Included in it was an outright repeal of the "death (estate) tax" and a reduction in the corporate rate to 20 percent and a limit on the maximum tax rate on S-corporations of 25 percent.

Upon release of the outline, Perdue stated, "Most family farms operate as small businesses, with the line between success and failure frequently being razor thin... President Trump is right to push for reform and reductions in the tax code, an overhaul that is long overdue." We strongly support Perdue's observations and believe that despite the enormity of this challenge, tax reform is a worthy and achievable goal. 🍅

Decision Time: 2018

U.S. potato growers will plant more potatoes in 2018 than they did in 2017. Several factors make an increase virtually inevitable. Processors will need more potatoes next year, both to make up for a shortfall in 2017 production and to supply new French fry production capacity. Strong prices for russet table potatoes also will encourage an expansion in the table potato sector. There is little doubt that the industry can use more potatoes than growers produced in 2017. The challenge will be to limit the 2018 acreage increase to the volume needed to meet industry needs without pushing open-market prices below sustainable profitability levels.

Processors made several misjudgments as they contracted for 2017-crop raw product needs. Fryers underestimated demand for their finished product. Dehydrators became convinced that they would be able to purchase a larger share of their raw product needs either as washed processing potatoes or as low-grade field-run potatoes at low open-market prices. Both fryers and dehydrators expected growers to convert a portion of their lost contract volume to open potatoes because of low prices for competing crops. That did not happen.

In addition, less than ideal growing conditions across much of North America reduced potato yields below expectations. Processors must deal with yield risk every year. However, this year's losses were compounded by the decisions to cut back on 2017 contract volumes. The danger now is that processors will overreact to the current situation and contract more than they need in 2018.

Increased Needs

Fryers will need more potatoes in 2018. The first need will be for early potatoes to offset a portion of the 2017-crop shortfall. In addition, potatoes will be needed for the industry's new processing capacity. Lamb Weston's 300-million-pound line in Richland, Washington, came on line this fall. However, the company's plan was to use much of that capacity during the 2017-18 processing season to allow downtime for refurbishing other plants that had been running beyond their design capacity. Observers expect all of the company's plants to be running at capacity next year. In addition, McCain Foods is scheduled to complete a new 400-million-pound production line at its Burley, Idaho, plant next August or September. There is some question as to how quickly the company will gear up production on that line, but when it reaches capacity, it will require approximately 15,000 acres of additional potatoes.

Dehydrators face additional challenges for production planning. Off-grade potatoes from other industry sectors are their cheapest source of raw material. Those supplies are dependent upon the volume of potatoes shipped through fresh-market channels, as well as on the quality of the potato crop. As Idaho's table potato industry has shifted away from Russet Burbanks to Russet Norkotahs, the availability of off-grade potatoes has declined. Idaho dehydrators have made up for the shortfall with field-run contracts. However, in years when production exceeds the needs of other industry sectors, dehydrators are able to purchase open potatoes at steep discounts to contract prices. The 2017 contract volume reductions were driven by a combination of low open-market prices for the 2016 crop, an unstable customer base and shifting ownership relationships for processing capacity. If this year's reduced production squeezes the dehydrators' profit margins, they can be expected to increase contract volumes for the 2018 crop. In the past, dehydrators have had a strong propensity to overreact to the previous year's supply conditions.

2018 Production Planning

Table potato growers face special challenges as they plan their 2018 production. Markets often react negatively to acreage increases, months before the potatoes actually are harvested, as growers attempt to move storage potatoes quickly to make room for the larger crop that is coming. When reports of large acreage increases in the Columbia Basin and Idaho surface this year, growers need to remember that a substantial portion of those increases will be needed to feed the processing industry.

By Bruce Huffaker, Publisher
North American Potato Market News

Growers will be tempted to increase table potato acreage to fill supply gaps in that sector. If they want to hold returns at a sustainable level, relative to costs, they need to exercise caution with their expansion plans. This year's table potato supply shortfall was created by two factors that are unlikely to be repeated in 2018: 1) adverse growing conditions in key table potato growing areas, including the Pacific Northwest and Wisconsin, reduced table potato yields in those areas below trend levels; and, 2) the shortfall in processing potato supplies pulled some potatoes away from the table market for use by fryers and dehydrators. Yields tend to bounce back following a downturn such as we experienced in 2017, much like what happened in the Red River Valley after that region's 2016 crop failure.

In addition, processors rarely repeat the same error in production planning two years in a row. A surplus of processing potatoes would create challenges for the table potato market. While processors may use some of the extra potatoes to replenish finished-product inventories, and/or to extend the processing season, they frequently find ways to divert a portion of their surplus to the table potato market. Fryers usually are obligated to purchase contract overages at contract prices within certain limits. However, if production exceeds those limits and the processors have enough raw product, the remaining potatoes are available to the open market. In addition, any potatoes that are rejected for quality issues can be diverted to other market channels.

Growers need to plan 2018 planting to minimize the risk of excess supply. Process growers need to make sure that they have contracts for the volume of potatoes that they plan to produce. If their 2017 yield was abnormally low, it should be discounted in the planning process (the tendency is to overemphasize that loss to make sure that production doesn't fall short of contract obligations two years in a row). Table potato growers need to make sure that they have a strong relationship with the packing shed that will run their product. Growers for each shed should make sure that, as a group, they only produce enough potatoes to cover that shed's known demand. It would be better to fall slightly short of that volume than to be long, as there is a strong possibility that supplies could spill over from the processing sector. 🍟

HUFFAKER'S HIGHLIGHTS

- 2018 potato acreage will be larger than the 2017 crop.
  - Processors need more potatoes to fill new production capacity and to make up for the shortfall from the 2017 crop.
  - Strong prices may encourage expansion of russet table potato acreage.
- Growers should be careful not to overreact to reports of increased acreage.
  - Panic selling of storage potatoes to make room for the 2018 crop should be unnecessary.
  - Much will depend upon how well growers manage their planting decisions.
- Points to consider when making planting decisions for 2018:
  - Potato yields are likely to return to trend levels.
  - Processors may overreact to the 2017 crop shortfall and contract for more potatoes than they need.
  - Supplies from the 2017 crop that were diverted from fresh production to processing use are likely to shift back to the table potato sector for the 2018 crop.

Tough Harvest Conditions

When an Integrated Approach Matters

By Bob Hesse, Director of Research and Development, Suberizer

When fanhouse, system and storage design details are all engineered with an integrated approach, storage performance is optimized and the desired airflow is delivered to the product in storage. Whether potatoes or onions, the storage manager's job is to minimize losses and maintain the quality of the crop in storage.

Less Than Perfect

An integrated approach matters when product placed in storage at harvest includes wet spuds, dirt, vines, disease or anything that can restrict airflow through the pile. This is where the benefits of an integrated approach come to the forefront.

Unfortunately, ensuring proper airflow in storage is often overlooked. Commonly, control system specifications suggest a desired supply air, but the design of the fanhouse, plenum or storage restricts the suggested supply air from reaching the product in the storage bay. An integrated approach to raw product storage design and construction simply minimizes restrictions to airflow and, consequently, can reduce operating costs.

Without dirt, vines and disease, a beautiful, mature product in storage at harvest does not present a significant restriction to airflow; it's a storage manager's dream.

But, even when harvest is less than perfect, storage with the engineered benefits of an integrated approach really shines; storage managers know that at least they have the ability to get the desired airflow to the floor of the crop, unless airflow through the pile is not assured. Attention must then be focused on weather, temperature, dirt, vines, crop maturity and disease, which all present a significant restriction to airflow through the pile.

Clean Product Means Maximum Airflow

At the end of the day, there is no substitute for eliminating dirt and vines and grading out problem potatoes at

Clean, mature product without dirt and vines enhances airflow.

TODAY  50° F A brief shower or two.	THUR  60° /50 A couple of showers.	FRI  45° /41 Rain and thunderstorms.

Weather at harvest affects the quality of the crop in storage. A brief shower or two is one thing. However, serious rain can accompany even ideal digging temperatures. The elimination of dirt from wet potatoes is critical. In addition, remember that cold temperatures can increase the risk of shatter bruise and skinning.

There is no substitute for eliminating dirt and vines and grading out undesirable product present at harvest.

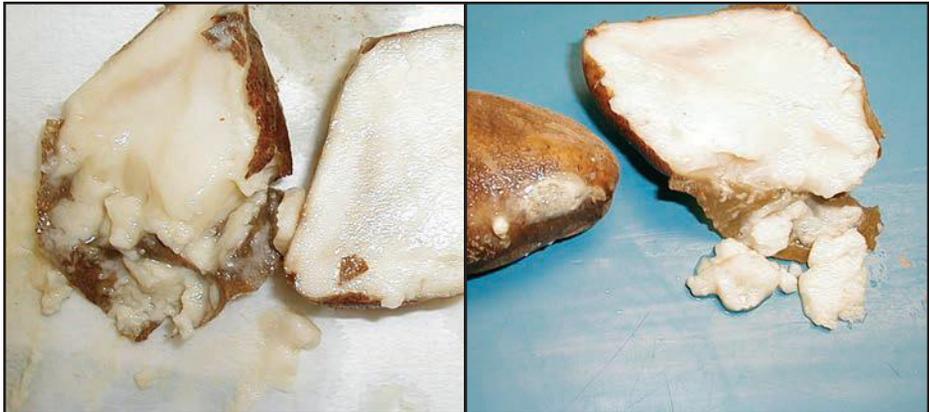

Skinning, shatter bruise and black spot bruise at harvest can develop disease and spread to adjacent product in storage. Eliminate bruise going into storage to reduce airflow restriction through the pile.

Fusarium tuber rot, Pythium, pink rot and especially fungal-like diseases such as late blight contribute to huge losses in storage. Photo courtesy University of Idaho

Most bacterial diseases are primarily controlled by planting certified, disease-free seed. However, bacterial soft rot, for example, if present, can develop, multiply and spread rapidly in storage to cause a huge reduction in airflow through the pile. Photo courtesy University of Idaho harvest that can develop severe bacterial and fungal disease in storage. Clean product placed in storage can usually be assumed to have a minimum resistance to airflow through the pile. That simply means you are dealing with the best possible available in a storage. Therefore, a thorough, accurate and complete airflow assessment of your empty storage, before harvest, presents the maximum airflow you will have available.

Lifblood

Appropriate airflow to the product in storage is regarded as “the lifblood” of successful storage performance. An integrated approach can provide an extra puffed-up punch of airflow uniformly distributed to the air floor vents. This can be an especially useful defense against weather and disease issues at harvest that can limit airflow through the pile and potentially impact product losses.
