get back to your landscape's roots with native plants

by DANIEL CORSE

Echter's Nursery & Perennial Specialist

There's a lot of talk out there about using native plants in our landscapes, and they can be excellent choices for many reasons. Many of these plants are low-water use for this region, beneficial for local pollinators, and well adapted to our climate and soils. Another great reason to plant natives is habitat restoration. With the rapid growth in population across the Front Range, many native habitats have been displaced. With over 900 species of native bees in Colorado, using native plants is a great way to support them. Many bees and other pollinators have evolved alongside the plants they visit, creating very specific pollinator syndromes, meaning the flowers have developed specific characteristics to attract and accommodate their pollinator partner. Native plants support our local pollinators and many species of birds and mammals, providing food and shelter throughout the year. Here in Colorado, we have many different types of native plants, including herbaceous flowering perennials, grasses, woody shrubs, evergreens, and even some larger trees. When using natives in a landscape, commercial or domestic, it does not have to be an "all or nothing" situation. Natives can be planted along with non-natives, as long as their cultural requirements are similar. With such an interest in planting natives, many of these plants are becoming more readily available at a retail level, giving homeowners and contractors access to the wide palette of plants that call this intermountain region home.

A few standout favorites are:

winecups

(Callirhoe involucrata)

chocolate flower

(Berlandiera lyrata),

Rocky Mountain

penstemon (Penstemon strictus)

apache plume

(Fallugia paradoxa)

dwarf baby blue

rabbitbrush

(Chrysothamnus nauseosus var nauseosus)

Whether it's a pocket pollinator garden on a parking strip or a xeriscape lawn conversion, every little bit helps create a habitat. Planting natives supports our local pollinators while adding a touch of Colorado to our gardens.

Happy gardening!

FLOWER GARDENS

Fertilize your spring-flowering bulb plants after the blooms have finished. Don't remove the leaves until they have turned brown or died back. The green leaves after flowering help build strength in the bulbs for next year.

Use soaker hoses in your flower beds and vegetable gardens. You can either lay the hose on top of the soil next to the plant or bury it to get water directly to the roots. Soaker hoses can also be used to water trees and shrubs.

PERENNIALS & VINES

If you have a fence you'd like to hide, there are several plants you can use besides shrubs. Vines like trumpet vine, silver lace vine, wisteria, honeysuckle vine, Virginia creeper and climbing roses are all hardy perennial varieties that can provide lots of interest throughout the growing season.

When planning a new flower bed or revamping an old one, don't overlook ornamental grasses for beautiful movement, contrasting texture and color throughout the year. Many low-water native varieties are widely available, such as big bluestem, little bluestem, switch grass and blue grama grass. Also try to group plants with similar water needs together, so you are not overwatering some and/or under-watering others.

TREES & SHRUBS

April is a great time to plant new trees and shrubs. Improve the soil with compost and/or peat moss, or expanded shale for heavily compacted soils. Then apply MYKE Tree & Shrub Transplanter and water in with Root Stimulator, both of which reduce transplant shock and stimulate root growth.

Fertilize your trees and shrubs with Ferti-lome Tree and Shrub Food. For larger trees, use a Ross Root Feeder with Ross Refill cartridges to get the fertilizer deeper into the ground.

Although annuals look beautiful planted around newly planted trees, there is a danger of over-watering your trees while trying keep your annuals happy.

VEGETABLE GARDENS

Before rototilling your garden, be sure the soil is on the dry side. Add compost and/or peat moss to the garden for added nutrients and improving drainage and soil structure.

It's time to plant seeds of peas, turnips, carrots, beets, spinach, Swiss chard, lettuce, & radishes. Plant garlic cloves, seed potatoes, dormant strawberry plants and onion sets.

Plant your fast growing crops in two-week intervals to prolong the availability of lettuce, spinach, peas, and radishes. When the weather gets too hot for these vegetables, plant some in the shade of taller plants, like pole beans and corn. This system is also good for gardeners with limited space.

LAWNS

April is a good time to seed or overseed lawns. Use a good grass seed and apply New Lawn Starter fertilizer after the seed is sown. Keep the area moist even after germination. Do not apply a pre-emergent crabgrass control before or after seeding, as this will prevent grass seed germination.

Core aerate your lawn before fertilizing this month. Not only does this help the lawn's vigor and health, it also reduces maintenance and water usage. Be sure your lawn is well watered a day or two before aeration.

Use a rain gauge to measure the amount of water you are putting on your lawn. Apply 3/4" to 1" slowly enough to evenly soak the lawn without running off the area.

HOUSEPLANTS

As day length is ever increasing now, houseplants will begin to "wake up" and grow more actively. Keep an eye on your soil moisture, as the plants will be taking up more water more frequently. Now is a great time to start a monthly fertilizing regimen.

BIRDS

It's spring cleaning season even for birds. If you haven't cleaned your bird houses this year, clean them out and then spray them with a bird feeder cleaner before the new birds arrive. This helps prevent the spread of avian flu and other harmful viruses, which could also spread to backyard chickens, ducks or turkeys if left unchecked.

You might not always see Sydney, but she's a big part of bringing you the beautiful plants you see in our greenhouses! As the Assistant Head Grower for our Annuals and Foliage departments, she spends most of her time working behind the scenes in our growing areas. It's her job to carefully monitor the plants we grow from the time they are seedlings until they're fully grown and ready to go out to the benches for sale. Since we grow 80% of the plants we sell, that's a big job!

It's important that any problems with pests or disease in any of our plants are discovered and resolved as quickly as possible, and Sydney's natural efficiency, versatility, and sunny disposition make that job seem effortless. Though she's only been here a couple of years, she's proven to be a valuable team member, and we're so happy to have her watching over our plants.
