Clive's Comments

Summer is over and I am not sure if we had one. The last week or so of February was quite warm (very hot in Adelaide) but not really any hotter than a normal summer. We are a funny group in that we are always talking about the weather and never really happy about it. Then we complain because it is too hot or too dry or too wet or too cold and we do so in a manner like we are surprised. We all know what Australian weather is like and the variations are huge. The range between a wet year and a dry year is over 2000% (compared with Europe at 20%) which causes us a lot of grief. One of our classic Australian poems makes it clear.

I love a sunburnt country was written by Dorothy Mackellar in 1906, and I am sure we all learned the words at primary school as a way of describing our country. The second verse just captures the huge range that makes Australia so great yet such a challenge:

*I love a sunburnt country,
A land of sweeping plains,
Of ragged mountain ranges,
Of drought and flooding rains.
I love her far horizons,
I love her jewel-sea,
Her beauty and her terror –
The wide brown land for me!*

I have lived in US and UK and in both places the weather was bland. In the US I lived in San Diego...

Clive's Comments continued...

...and the old song 'It never rains in southern California' is true. We averaged 5mm a year and where I lived the temperature range was basically 15 to 25 all year round with maybe one storm per annum. Nice weather but I missed the storms and changes. Then I lived in Essex in the UK. A hot summer day was 30 and a cold winter night was 0 but the majority of the year it was 10 to 20 with lots of drizzle and cloud cover. Again okay for living but boring and I missed our hot summer days.

It seems so ironic that we spend so much energy and time thinking about the weather when it is one of the factors in life that we have no control over. All we can do is move to somewhere the weather might be more aligned with our life styles. To me it is interesting and a symbol of the changing seasons. It is the weather that brings about the great range of plants we can grow and the colours they display each year.

As I understand it we have had three years of La Nina which has meant we have had good rainfall and lots of floods but minimal fires and not much drought damage. We are expected to enter a prolonged period of El Nino which means much drier seasons and even drought. This will then lead to much drier bushland, and after three years of good growing conditions we can expect some major fires. Probably not in 2023/4 but maybe in 24/5 and definitely in 25/6.

What are our governments doing to prepare for these high risk fire periods? I suspect nothing but would like to hope that they are investing in better and more equipment. Starting recruitment drives for both paid and volunteer brigades. Greater levels of training and preparation for all those working and living in and with fire zones. The nature of Australian Governments (and probably most Western Democracies) is that they prefer to be reactionary and wait until problems arise then respond. Maybe they could spend our taxes on being more preparatory and pre-empting what certainly will be.

Anyway how do we prepare as nurseries to a drier and warmer spring/summer? Do we change our plant palette? Should we start marketing to our end consumers that we will be having some dry times? It would be good if gardening shows and horticultural media could start advising the gardeners about best watering systems, tanks and even drought friendly plant layout. Let's get on the front foot so that when things dry out and the government starts talking water restrictions we can help the gardening public to not worry about their plants.

The greatest problem of drought is not the water restrictions but the constantly changing rules. The gardening public is okay when they stop getting worse. So long as they can buy and put plants in the ground based on stable water usage rules our industry can succeed. If, as an industry, we have plans and options in the system we can also debate with the government about what level of restrictions are needed/acceptable. It is about being prepared and demonstrating this to both government and the public.
