GREAT SEAL OF THE STATE OF HAWAII

The centered heraldic shield contains eight stripes of the Hawaiian flag denoting the eight major islands and the ancient white, ball-topped puloulou (tabu) sticks which symbolize authority. The crest and rising sun represent birth of a new state and the Phoenix bird, the change from monarchy to democratic government. The taro, banana and fern leaves are typical Hawaiian plants. King Kamehameha I stands to the left, the Goddess of Liberty to the right, above a comment the King made in 1843 when the British restored sovereignty of the islands to the Hawaiians—"The life of the land is perpetuated in righteousness."

CHINN HO

FOREWORD

To the people of Hawaii

By CHINN HO

(Mr. Ho is president of Capital Investment Co. of Hawaii, the developer of the Ilikai Hotel and Makaha Valley as well as the sponsor of many other projects. He also is board chairman of Gannett Pacific Inc., which publishes the Honolulu Star-Bulletin and two daily newspapers on Guam.)

This book does more than present the leaders of Hawaii. In its own way it tells much of the story of Hawaii and reflects within its pages a chart of progressive endeavor along with many channel markers which clearly show the way for the State to maintain its momentum in providing a better life for its peoples.

Hawaii goes into this new decade with a recent history of movement which demonstrates an unusual talent and tolerance for change. Revealed in these pages also is a remarkable determination for self-improvement. The results, in terms of standard of living and increased opportunities have far exceeded the hopes of most. Our biographees were active participants in these landmarks of change. Many were and are, its architects.

Only a short while ago, during the mid '50's, Hawaii experienced the beginning of a significant renaissance in its political, social and economic systems.

Previously, most of the leaders of Hawaii, except for those in the Armed Forces, were people who, whether native-born or immigrant, expected to spend the rest of their lives in Hawaii and centered their interests almost entirely within these islands. A prime example was the fact that most capital invested in Hawaii was generated in Hawaii.

Then came the realization of long time efforts by a few progressive leaders to create and maintain an attractive and inviting climate for mainland investors. A corollary benefit of this effort was an infusion of mainland business and professional talent, bringing fresh approaches and new enthusiasms.

At the same time many local companies began looking outward for investment opportunities, for expansion and for employment of their specialties in agriculture, construction and other fields.

One result was a major breakthrough and change in Hawaii's vision of itself, as a practical meeting place between East and West.

Air transport became a strong contributing factor during this period. Travel time to the mainland dropped to seven hours and finally in 1959 to less than five hours.

Personalities such as Henry J. Kaiser, Rudolph Petersen and others appeared on Hawaii's social and economic scenes. As a result of these mainland associations and influences, a new confidence and broadened faith was progressively generated amongst our people. New leaders appeared and became recognized as the pages in this book so clearly reveal.

Hawaii had begun to mature in the business sector but probably the most significant change of all turned up in the political arena. Elections of 1954 and 1956 saw the political party which had dominated Hawaii for over 50 years give way almost completely to its opposition which represented forces for liberalization and general social progress. Hawaii had finally become democratized.

Labor unions too became recognized as a permanent fixture with an economic and political force equal to, if not even greater than, anything the islands had seen before.

These massive changes unleashed a growth which picked up momentum with the exciting attainment of Statehood in 1959 and the start of jet air service across the Pacific in that same year. By the 1960's this dramatic growth had turned into a welcoming boom, improving the opportunities of almost everyone in Hawaii.

Population increased a little more than 50% from 1950 to 1970 but employment nearly doubled and the per capita income more than tripled from $1,387 to $4,530. At the same time the cost of living index climbed only 72% bringing a generous gain in real income.

Some State services grew even more remarkably. The University of Hawaii's total enrollment for instance, grew from 5,755 to 39,815.

And all this time the character of Hawaii was changing from an isolated and primarily self-contained group of islands to an international metropolis, the meeting place for business transactions in the Pacific. Each year more and more mainland and foreign businesses, particularly Japanese, began to take an active investment interest in Hawaii. More Hawaiian businesses branched out into the Pacific, to the American mainland, Central and South America and to a degree, worldwide. Even the majority ownership of several island firms passed outside the State.

Another innovation was the increasing practice of alliances or mergers with overseas corporations. As a recent example, the Honolulu Star-Bulletin, publisher of this series of books, merged in 1971 with the Gannett Co., Inc. based in Rochester, New York. The arrangement gave the Gannett newspaper group an entrance into the Pacific area where it expects greater growth. The Star-Bulletin gained the strengths which come from a strong national affiliation and leadership while at the same time preserving its local editorial autonomy.

The many examples of a new national and international interest in Hawaii promise continuing sources of capital and talent for the development of the islands, for expanded research and for the opening of new industries. And from a careful reading of the biographies in this volume we should generally feel assured that our leaders will continue to be dynamic in their approach to what will surely be an accelerated rate of change, bringing opportunities far exceeding those we have known.

It will be a great challenge to all of us who are at present residents of Hawaii to adjust to the changes that will follow the influx of many more people from Asia and the mainland. We must maintain Hawaii as a bridge of understanding between mainland United States and the Orient.

But worthwhile constructive progress doesn't just happen. It comes from someone doing something and doing it right. Today, more than ever before, it calls for a positive approach, realistic planning, bold thinking and bold action.

Right now is the time for our newspapers, news media, schools and other civic and financial institutions to encourage serious thinking about the more immediate future of Hawaii and the Pacific. A "think program" for Hawaii and even "think industries" are needed here now.

The University of Hawaii can play one of the most important roles of all if our future is to benefit from constructive development. Unlike most states whose present endeavors have reached a degree of maturity, Hawaii cannot seek out heavy manufacturing to fill the gap. And many of the light industries and "think enterprises" not dependent upon surface transportation must necessarily locate near quality centers of learning from which their scholastically oriented scientific and professional workers can draw needed intellectual stimulation. Here we are limited but not stopped.

It is probably unrealistic to assume our University will be recognized as an Oxford of the Pacific in the foreseeable future. But it is realistic to expect the University of Hawaii to become pre-eminent and world recognized in several carefully chosen special fields germane to our particular situation. These are fields that would not only broaden the scholastic and post-graduate opportunities for our students but help attract worthwhile new endeavors compatible with our environment and needed by our maturing economy.

International law, particularly international law related to the nations of the Pacific, will become increasingly important. It ought to be possible for any corporation anywhere in the world to turn to one source for information on the laws of all the countries of Asia and the Pacific. That source should be the University of Hawaii.

The increasingly apparent potential of the Pacific Basin with Hawaii at its center provides logic for the creation within our University of a medical research center with a Pacific interest. Light industry of a medical technology and supply nature would surely follow.

The many academic disciplines and specialties within the scope of oceanography are timely and apropos to our geography and our needs. A good start has been made. Much good, extending to many people will result from the University's thorough participation in this opportunity.

Social, economic and physical research are primary ingredients of resultful planning. Quality training in methods as well as a program of contract research by the University would be a practical contribution.

Ingenuity and research will be needed to preserve the agricultural industries of Hawaii as we know them now. High cost problems can be overcome but shifts to new crops and new markets will be necessary in some instances. It should not be long before we see a higher local production of meat, produce and poultry.

Preserving and developing agriculture will help keep open space and green space in Hawaii, a necessity for those who live here. It is a need that can be met through wise leadership in government and in business.

To help accomplish these and other objectives the University must have an international council advising it, including leaders from Japan and Asia as well as from the U.S. mainland. Appointees to its Board of Regents must be persons of broad understanding of the University's role as the learning center of the Pacific with its primary emphasis on quality.

Because of the kinds of people these activities would attract and the services they would perform, the total impact would create a strong, visible reaction within our business and cultural milieu.

Changes in this decade will be everywhere and will affect everyone. Generally there will be an acceleration of improvement. Already we see enlightened predictions that air freight will all but outdate surface freight by the end of the 70's. Yet, conversely, a much greater intermingling between our peoples could be around the corner with the introduction of inter-island ferries. A step forward on the social and economic scale for many families is in sight with the advent of new concepts in financing whereby employees can more easily become all or part owner of their places of work. Leaders in our expanded tourist industry will soon see the absolute necessity of careful planning followed by realistic, privately financed destination promotion.

All of these are positive forces, not to be confused with mistakes of the past. No reason to bridle our optimism and our enthusiasm because of a wrong turn in the road yesterday. There are many positive new directions available today with improved concepts of planning and a widely held insistence that all our people benefit.

The men and women carried in these pages will be the planners and doers of the '70's. Their ability to lead and to adapt to change will largely determine how Hawaii succeeds in its new role in the Pacific.

Each new era in Hawaii has witnessed new directions emanate from her political institutions. Much real progress can be expected here if the incumbents seek more than a consolidation of their considerable gains and if both they and their opponents reach out for new standards of enlightened self-interest.

We must keep a balanced image of Hawaii in view.

We must take full advantage of the combination of cultures that we have here.

We must stress the harmony of all peoples and interpret the importance of this message to both our young people and our new residents.

Our local foundations, financial leaders and our business corporations should make dollar contributions so that our public institutions can have the services of men of integrity, broadness in personality and vision, the very best talent available.

Above all, we must bring to our problems the best leadership we can find, wherever we can find it. Most of the time it will be local—but we must not be afraid to reach outside Hawaii to get the top know-how that we need.

When we look backward we see how much we owe to some of the now-deceased leaders of the recent past—men like Willard E. Givens, Henry J. Kaiser, Walter F. Dillingham, Frank Atherton, Jack Hall, Riley Allen and Ray Coll—for their dedicated efforts to bring about a better Hawaii. This also goes for men like James H. Couey, Jr., a resident of Hawaii for only three years, when his untimely death in 1971 cost me a great friend and Hawaii a potentially great leader.

When we look forward we find this same element of leadership will be even more important because changes are coming faster and we must respond more quickly. We need to be able to adjust to change not tomorrow but now.

To the Men and Women of Hawaii, as leaders, I say in closing, let us not consider ourselves as the privileged. Let us humble ourselves with the willingness to learn and to understand the point of view of others. The objective we seek will be the universal common interest of all men—to provide for all the opportunity to achieve the best quality of life.

Editorial Note

This ninth edition marks the 55th year since the Star-Bulletin began publication of this series of biographical reference books.

Begun in 1917 to satisfy the needs of writers, biographers, historians, businessmen and colleagues, the first edition presented 652 men as those of most noteworthy achievement in Hawaii. The population then was just over 250,000.

Subsequent volumes were brought out in 1921, 1930 and 1935 as "Men of Hawaii." In 1925 "The Story of Hawaii and Its Builders" provided a comprehensive view on past as well as then contemporary leaders of prominence.

Volume Six, "Pan-Pacific Who's Who" in 1940-41 covered the entire Pacific Basin and gave the first nod of recognition to women. Retitled in 1954 as "Men and Women of Hawaii," women constituted 12% of the biographees.

The eighth edition in 1966 presented over 2,800 biographical sketches. "Men and Women of Hawaii," 1972, includes almost 3,700, a true reflection of island growth and dedicated, concerned people.

Individuals invited to submit their biographies for this edition were selected from over 10,000 suggestions received from many and varied organizations and people. There was no charge or obligation involved.

All names were evaluated by a committee of men and women knowledgeable in many fields who carefully screened the biographees with a conscientious desire to provide as complete and valid a reference text as possible.

Some omissions and errors are inevitable in a volume of such massive detail. The committee and staff made every effort to see that a true representation of outstanding people of Hawaii was made and that all material was accurately presented. Omissions occur by specific request or because questionnaires were not returned prior to deadlines.

Data for the biographies was furnished by the individuals and a proof of the completed biography was submitted to each person for his approval before it went into final print.

Criteria for evaluation was sustained involvement and significant contribution in one or more fields—educational, scientific, economic, philanthropic, religious and civic.

Only Hawaii residents are included except for those persons who may be in temporary residence elsewhere but who are employed by a Hawaii-based company or who have permanent residency in Hawaii of no less than six months per year.

Biographies are written within the following framework.

Full name.

General occupational title.

Place and date of birth.

Parents' names with mother's surname in parenthesis. The father's surname is omitted for men and unmarried women except where the surname is different from that of the biographee.

Name of spouse and date of marriage.

Names of children in order of birth.

Education. When the regular course was followed leading to a diploma or degree, the school, degree and date of completion is given. When attendance was for a shorter period, dates of attendance are given.

Employment. Consecutive positions held, with whom and dates employed is given. When the same position was held in more than one company, the title is used only once and the series separated by commas and ended by a semi-colon or period.

Military service follows civilian employment except in the case of career military men.

Volunteer activities cover civic, philanthropic and political involvement. Here, as with employment, titles are not repeated in a series.

Honors, decorations and awards.

Affiliations including clubs, associations, lodges, etc. with titles and dates of offices held.

Religion or church affiliation.

Other information of ancestral, historical or special note. In some instances this material is incorporated in the initial section of the biography.

Complete home and business addresses. If only a zip code follows a street address or Post Office Box number, it may be assumed the location is Honolulu. Island names follow the names of all other cities and towns.

If a biographee is deceased since publication of the 1966 edition and before February 1, 1972, date of death is included.

Unless otherwise noted, it may be assumed that all activities are in Hawaii except when other locations of schools, businesses or organizations seem obvious.

To the many hundreds of people who suggested names for consideration—to the large committee of civic-minded individuals who volunteered their many hours in evaluation and to the warm island people who gave constant encouragement and help, the staff expresses its grateful appreciation.
