Please Read Carefully

We are including our price list of Peonies in this catalogue because our old customers have had our descriptive list. We will gladly send it to anyone who has not had it or who has lost it, if they will ask us for it.

The prices quoted are for strong, natural divisions of two, three or more eyes and no small plants will be offered, as they have been found unsatisfactory.

These prices include free packing but we do not pay the transportation charges. We will ship by express unless asked to send by parcel post. If customers prefer the package sent by parcel post, please send ten cents additional for each root or division and we will pay the postage and insure the safe delivery of the package.

All roots are guaranteed to be true to name, from healthy stock which has bloomed and been checked carefully by us. Occasionally a mistake may occur in digging and labeling and if such a case should happen we will replace the plant or return the money paid.

Orders are filled as soon after the first of September as growing conditions permit, exactly in the order in which they are received and as the quantity of some of the choicer varieties is limited we advise placing your order early.

TERMS

Our terms are cash with the order, and we will promptly return the money for any varieties of which we have sold out. We will not substitute.

NOTE—Many varieties are described in our catalogue which are not listed for sale this year. Should any of these be desired ask about them.

IRISES

There is probably no garden flower that has the great range of color of the Iris; blue, yellow, white, red and intermediate shades make it possible to obtain almost any desired effect, and this fact, together with the ease with which the Iris is grown, is undoubtedly responsible for the increasing popularity of this flower. The name Iris is derived from the Greek, meaning Rainbow, and certainly every color of the rainbow has been caught and held in the petals of this flower.

They can be used anywhere. The dwarf varieties are quite adaptable to the rock garden; the taller hybrids can be massed in any garden, including the formal one, and the Japanese and Siberian varieties are wonderfully effective near or around the water. The foliage lasts well and the glaucous green of the leaves makes a restful patch of color when the plants are not in bloom. With a bit of care in selecting varieties, continuous bloom for at least thirty days can be arranged. If you have never had the thrill of going out into a bright spring morning to see for the first time an Iris which opened during the night or at dawn, you have missed the spirit of Spring.

How easily Irises are grown, compared with almost any other flower. Sunlight and an ordinary well drained garden soil, not overly rich, are all that they require. Irises do not like manure and if fertilization seems needed a small amount of bone meal, mixed with limestone, can be stirred in around the roots. They are best transplanted soon after the plants are through flowering, in July and August, when they soon establish themselves well enough to go through the winter without being heaved by the frost. If planted in the fall a light mulch will protect them from the lifting action of the frost, but it is well to set them a little deeper than for summer planting. The soil should be prepared as carefully as for any seed bed and if possible allowed to settle. Then dig a wide, shallow trench and spread the long roots out in a natural position but only just covering the bulb. Pack the earth well with the hand, and water. The water will continue the packing process and also leave the top of the bulb exposed to the sun as it should be. Plants should only be reset after they have become so crowded that they no longer bloom well. Cultivation will improve the looks of the garden and increase the vigor of the plants.

Two diseases are noticed among Irises: the borer and the rot. The borer is a small worm, hatched about blooming time, from an egg laid on the leaves by a night flying moth. The worm, increasing in size, gradually eats its way down the stalk between the leaves, which are quickly discolored. During this period the worm can be easily detected and destroyed by pulling the leaves apart. If the worm reaches the bulb, it eats out the inside while developing into a creamy-white grub about an inch and one quarter long, causing rot and sometimes the loss of many blossom buds. When a planting becomes infected in this way the bulbs must be lifted, thoroughly cleaned and reset. Watch the foliage and destroy the worms while it is still easy. We have three colonies of Purple Martins established in houses at intervals over the field. These birds will feed upon the egg laying moth as it comes out in the early evening. To see and hear them while taking their food on the wing is an inspiration and to be free from the borer in our Iris gardens is a great satisfaction.

The rot seems to be caused by wet, soggy soil, due to poor drainage or an unusually wet season. If Irises are set far enough apart so that the sunlight can reach the soil and care is taken to provide good drainage there will be little chance for rot to develop. Acid soil may be a contributing cause, so an application of crushed limestone should always be given a sour soil.

In the following descriptive list of Irises we are offering most of the tried and proven varieties which appeal to the average garden owner. Some of the new and outstanding varieties are still so high in price that they can be considered only by the collector; however, we are offering many of them at prices which are within the reach of the average flower lover and all of them have been tested in our rather severe climate.

The numbers which precede the names are the ratings of the varieties. These ratings are the results of votes taken by the members of the American Iris Society on the basis of a theoretically perfect Iris which would rate 100. A flower which rated 70 would be a good Iris and additional points indicate its approach toward perfection. The ratings can well be used as a guide in selecting varieties.

WE DO NOT SELL IRISES IN THE SPRING, as we have found that the growth is seriously retarded. We will ship in July and August when the plants are in the best condition for transplanting. Our prices are all based on single natural divisions, good strong rhizomes that ought to bloom the following season. Some varieties have much smaller rhizomes than others and this must be considered, but we always send out the strongest possible plant according to the variety.

CRAWFORD SEEDLINGS

We are constantly growing and selecting new seedlings. Some we are holding until our stock is large enough to permit us to list them, but we will be glad to show them to visitors. We can now offer ANNETTE, which is distinct enough to be of value in any garden, and more will follow.

Mixed seedlings at $5.00 per 100.

CHRISTMAS CACTUS

This old-fashioned house-plant always blooms for us at Christmas. We set the pots in the ground in a sunny place for the summer, take them inside and place in a south window, and they always show buds by Thanksgiving. As they are plants from the desert, they do not want much water but do like the hot sun. Small plants that should bloom next Christmas, 35c each.
