Introduction to psychOpedia by Joe Santulli

Why is this book called “psychOpedia”? It seems somewhat... irrelevant, doesn't it?

Allow me to explain, though the explanation may simply run you around in circles, leaving you exactly where you started except with less padding on the bottom of your shoes and a recently developed nervous tick. This is, after all, what I do best.

A long time ago—it was the early 1990's to be more specific—the at-the-time very small staff of Digital Press began a side project: an encyclopedia of important events, games, people, and companies, and asked our readership what they'd like to see in this “classic gaming encyclopedia”. As the gang began to hammer out the details behind the ever-growing list, co-founder Kevin Oleniacz and I began to work through the arduous task of naming this ambitious project.

We had already had some experience with this, of course. Just over a year earlier, we had come up with the ingeniously vague “Digital Press”, a company name devised to appear as huge and corporate or as small and independent as was needed in any given circumstance, and covering perhaps everything in the known universe on possibly every form of media ever conceived. That same summer, our local volleyball team needed a name and a logo, and we finally settled on “The Rotting Marys”, a team name so devious that it often bewildered our opponents into a swirling tempest of confusion just long enough for one of us to pound home a game-winning spike. The logo for “The Rotting Marys” was similarly innocuous: an evil green skeletal face holding a volleyball in its bony hand, covering up all but its hollow eyes and large cranium. A cranium which had a big pink bow on it.

So you see, we were no strangers to mystery and wonder in our name branding. As we sat there, we had really only one idea in mind. Create a title of mystery and wonder again. And maybe get some piece of “encyclopedia” in there so at least WE would remember what it was we were doing.

Kevin's very first suggestion was “Psycho-pedia”. I was in the middle of a gulp of Mello Yello and certainly in the middle of thrashing him at my favorite Atari 2600 game, so he got little argument from me (he was always the harder-working of us). A tweak to the formatting of the word he had just invented and psychOpedia was born.

This side-project ran over the course of many issues in our bi-monthly publication, culminating in a complete summary in an early version of the Collector's Guide. Unfortunately over time the encyclopedia outgrew any possibility of including it with a game list, and continued to grow as a side project of sorts. All of the “people, place, and event” information went directly into the Collector's Guide database but there was this extra bit that to date never quite made it.

And so, we are happy to present to you this gigantic appendix to our rarity guide works, one which tosses rarities and price guide information right out the window, watches it splatter on the pavement below, then goes outside and cleans it all up using a rather large mop.

Wonder and mystery: psychOpedia, use it in good health and clever gaming exploits.

THE BASICS

Though most of this book should be quite straightforward, we included a few notations specifically to baffle and confuse you. That way, we can seem really smart by explaining them. See? It's all a clever illusion. That said, here is the quick explanation of these mystifying codes.

[CD] denotes that the game is a CD-ROM release. Some game systems are strictly CD-ROM, and we didn't put this denotation on those—only on systems where the CD releases are less expected, such as Sega 32X or TurboGrafx-16.

[IM] denotes that the game is an import. Yes, we're a little US-centric and "imports" to us are games that were not released in the USA.

[PR] denotes that the game only exists in prototype form. Sometimes you'll find reproductions of popular or unique prototype/beta games. We've listed them this way so you know these games probably do not have retail packaging or manuals.

[RM] denotes rumored titles ("Rumor Mill" section of the DP Collector's Guide). We've listed them here for completeness, and you'll see that certain libraries make a little more sense when you see what was meant to come but did not. Of course, our favorite event in this hobby is the one where a rumored title is found in prototype form and "bumped up" to that classification.

(+) and (-) denote games that editor Santulli feels are very good "+" or very bad "-". Feel free to ignore these, or take them to heart as you hunt down games for your favorite system.

STAFF ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

A tremendous amount of work has been put into this edition of the DP Guide. The staff listed on the inside cover is the best I could ever hope to have. If you know your collectors, then you know this is like a "dream team". I'd like to acknowledge a few of the folks who have made a major contribution to THIS edition:

Larry Anderson

In addition to being a crazed individual when it comes to all things TurboGrafx-16 and PC-Engine, Larry has a soft spot for the PC-FX, LaserActive, SuperGrafx and Neo-Geo Pocket (of which he can lay claim to having nearly complete collections of). When he isn't hoarding games, he uses his geeky powers and normally dormant 3rd eye to keep the web pages of Digital Press humming for all to enjoy.

Adrienne Barr

Adrienne "Achika" Barr has been in the hobby since she received her first Nintendo at the age of 5. Since then she has been assimilating every system and game that crosses her path. In 2001 Adrienne opened her website, www.vidgame.net, a nice companion to Digital Press in its cross-era coverage of gaming history. Meanwhile, she has been studying photography though the past few years the hobby of video gaming has been invading her photography world. It's all good to us.

James Barton

We don't know a lot about this Sega guru other than that he's an intense Sega fan. James presently runs a Sega enthusiasts site at <http://classicgaming.com/saturn> and is working on the Encyclopedia Segagaga, so his research and ours intersect, parallel, and overlap. Thus, he has been assimilated.

Sylvain de Chantal

You'd never know that the 7th Edition of the Collector's Guide was Sylvain's first foray into this territory, and there's a good reason for that. "SlyDC" has been the maintainer of many classic gaming system FAQ's for a number of years. As such, he was the natural choice to lead many of the newer sections you'll see in recent books, including the Microvision, "Pong" systems, R-Zone and Mattel Aquarius portions of our Guides.

Frank Cifaldi

Frank Cifaldi is a 20-year resident of Las Vegas, which makes him a regular at the annual Classic Gaming Expo at the Plaza Hotel. Frank considers himself a "digital archaeologist," and has been studying the NES since sometime around mid-1999, in correlation with his termination of a two-year relationship. Luckily for us, he's stayed single ever since, and in less than three years has helped uncover new information on the seamy underbelly of Nintendo-dom, adding a ton of previously-unknown third world info and unreleased prototypes to our Nintendo section. Frank owns and maintains TheRedEye.net, a personal shrine to the queerest of the queer in the world of NES games.

Dave Giarrusso

The multi-talented Mr. Giarrusso started out around here as a mop-boy, cleaning out the corporate latrines on the 2nd floor. He has since changed hats and career paths many times while with Digital Press, doing extensive writing, artwork, forum administration, and since issue #49 of the bi-monthly publication is also the editor-in-chief! Sure, this is all a great step down from mop-boy, but Dave seems happy and this way no one really gets hurt. A brilliant, creative mind that we simply could not do without.

Roloff "Deleto" de Jeu

Our overseas correspondent worked closely with Marco Kerstens (listed below) to overhaul the Atari "import" section once again. Though he doesn't like the term "import", he's just going to have to live with it. :) Collectively, they've added hundreds of new titles to that section and opened our eyes to the still-booming world of PAL and Euro titles that never seem to stop coming. You can thank Roloff for psychOpedia, too—he's been on a personal mission to print it for several years now.

John Hardie

Simply put, "big daddy" John Hardie and Sean Kelly are my partners in this project. Besides always keeping me in check, these boys lend inspiration and creativity to this Guide. John is one of the most ANAL people I know, and that's a very good thing when it comes to putting together a reference guide. He's taken all of the Atari sections and given them yet another face-lift (the Atari XE section was completely re-written for the classic edition). Without John, there would probably be no DP Guide.

Adam Harvey

Adam was first noticed by his fellow collectors when he snatched an Atari 2600 grail, Eli's Ladder, up from under their noses at an annual gaming event. He was also instrumental in... well, we're not sure what else he has done yet, but rumor has it he owns his own game store and collects Atari. He's also a driving force behind the upkeep of our PlayStation section.

James Howe

Another new face for this edition, James emerged from a long-term lurking habit brandishing a PAL Megadrive gamelist. When not scouring North-East England's car-boot sales and charity shops for gaming goodies, James prefers to spend his time sleeping.

Keir Howell

Keir has been hopelessly addicted to Commodore games since he got his first VIC-20 back in 1981. His collection now includes over 25 game consoles and classic computers. Keir is also webmaster for several small websites including The Ultimate Wizard Website (<http://www.geocities.com/svipdaag/vidgames/wizard/>).

Sean Kelly

Sean always offers more than I can take, but what I take A LOT from him on is his work on the DP CD-ROM, which was originally produced back in 1997. Don't ask him when the next one is coming out, but know that the CD has been growing on our hard drives, so... someday. Sean is the voice of reason in many of Digital Press' projects, and there is no more diligent editor on this staff.

Marco Kerstens

My "other" friend from the Netherlands, Marco has one of the (if not the) greatest Atari 2600 collections on the planet. While many of us can claim to have a great US collection, Marco's got that PLUS an incredible library of PAL and other "non-US" titles. He also happens to be a great guy, and has been a major contributor to the Atari 2600 import section.

Dieter Koenig

Dieter is the webmaster of the Classic Consoles Center (<http://www.dieterkoenig.at/cc/>). Dieter took on the task of creating Collector's Guide-quality sections for two rather obscure systems, especially to those of us in North America, the Creativision and the Interton VC4000. A brilliant first effort, this.

Andrew Krieg

Andrew Krieg has been collecting video games for over 20 years. Today his collection consists of over 30 systems and 2200 games. In 1993 Andrew started to catalog his collections, and to make concise ASCII collection lists available on the web. He was the first to offer lists for the Atari 8-bit computers, Virtual Boy, Super Nintendo, Sega Pico, and others. His cataloging efforts (which are available at <http://my.execpc.com/~krieg/VidGames.htm>) are what led him to cross paths with the Digital Press crew and the Rarity List Database project.

Dan Mahlendorf

Like everyone else who worked on this guide, Dan "Yoshi-M" Mahlendorf has been addicted to video games from a young age. He cut his teeth on a Coleco Telstar Arcade when he was but a lad. While he has played and owned many of the classic game consoles, Dan has focused on the more modern systems (the 90's!) for his collection for its historical impact on today's world of gaming. His contributions to the gaming scene can be read in his N64 reviews on www.world-of-nintendo.com, game repair articles for Good Deal Games, and an online arcade showcasing work from independent game creators called This Old Home Arcade (now defunct with the demise of Xoom.com).

Russ Perry Jr.

Once called "ubiquitous" in the pages of Tips & Tricks, Russ Perry Jr's name should be familiar to anyone who's paid attention in the videogaming hobby -- as a prolific letter-writer during the heady videogame fanzine era, as a long-time collector of anything and everything but especially the obscure, as current editor of the 2600 Connection and occasional staff writer for Digital Press, as moderator of Stellalist (a mailing list dedicated to programming the Atari 2600), as member of the team that produced the Stella Gets A New Brain game compilation and occasional proof-reader for other videogame related projects, and as the only person to have their own directory on the Digital Press CD.

Don Rogers

Don got hooked on video games back in the 70's after playing Pong and Anti-Aircraft at a Shakey's Pizza. His first Atari 2600 arrived in 1980 and since then it's been a non-stop ride hunting and collecting games. His interests in collecting have been centered on Atari but include all classic systems of the 80's and many of the systems from the 90's. He met John Hardie in 1986 and they got each other going in collecting Atari 8-bit hardware and software. During that time of looking for Atari 8-bit stuff they cleared away a pile of now rare and uncommon 2600 titles and Don made the comment "You know John, we'll probably be collecting this 2600 stuff one of these days." On top of collecting stuff for classic systems of the 80's Don is also a devoted fan of Sega's Saturn and Dreamcast systems and the NEC TurboGrafx-16. Since the 80's it's been a continuing quest of searching through filthy warehouses, driving hundreds of miles on the rumor of old games being around and flying across the country to attend trade shows and collectors meets.

Kristine Roper

Kristine has been a gamer since the tender age of six when her parents brought home an Odyssey system (that's the first one, not an Odyssey2...yes, she's THAT old.). She has owned practically every video game system at same point in time (except for the Adventurevision and the Xbox), and will continue to do so until the day she either dies or ends up homeless, whichever comes first. Her current projects include collecting every PlayStation game ever released, moderating the Digital Press video game forum, and trying to prevent her head from exploding.

Christian Scott

Christian Scott is a long time game collector and handheld fanatic. Christian is best known for founding and hosting the New England Classic Game Collectors meets, which take place 3 times a year at his home in Boston. Christian has been a vocal contributor to RGVC, Digital Press and AtariAge for many years and actively collects for every platform under the sun. Christian welcomes any contributions and suggestions for his handheld section and can be reached at christianscott27@aol.com.

Scott Stilphen

Scott plays many roles here. Besides the upkeep to the book, Atari catalog and Atari label variation sections, he's put together a whale of an "easter egg" compendium, which you'll find in the pages of the Collector's Guide and website.

Adam Trionfo

Adam stepped up to completely overhaul the Astrocade section of the Collector's Guide in 2002. He is a die-hard, and you may know his work at Orphaned Computers & Game Systems (www.geocities.com/SiliconValley/Server/2990/) or Bally Alley (www.classicgaming.com/ballyalley/), and if you don't, you owe it to yourself to go check them out.

Dave Warmington

Dave Warmington is your classic video gaming idiot. His first memories come from the near-flawless arcade ports the Atari 5200 had to offer. From there, came the NES, and it was all downhill from there for Dave as he dove into gaming addiction. A certified Nintendo junkie, he cannot escape the gaming goodness Nintendo has dropped on us over the past two decades. His regular ritualistic sacrifices to his NES system have helped move him towards his ultimate goal: owning every Nintendo-made cart. Ever. Dave spends his day sitting on his ass, maintaining the SNES section and throwing in his overly psychopathic comments to the NES and Genesis sections.

Janice Prishwalko

What does our spokesmodel Janice Prishwalko have to do with this Guide? Well, nothing really... but we really like the way she looks with our gear.

20th CENT FOX

Profile: To get an idea just how popular the Atari 2600 was at one time, imagine this: giant-sized multimedia conglomerate 20th Century Fox even wanted a share! This wasn't just a passing fancy, either. Fox obviously was looking for a hit on the 2600, and after seventeen tries, they finally gave up. Remember, this was long before "The Simpsons" or "In Living Color".

One of the most interesting lineups of any manufacturer for the 2600, Fox produced seven games based on movies (Alien, Fantastic Voyage, Flash Gordon, MASH, Megaforce, Porky's, and Spacemaster X-7) - eight if you include Revenge of the Beefsteak Tomatoes, based on the movie "Attack of the Killer Tomatoes". Some of these games were actually pretty good. Spacemaster X-7 is a favorite with shooter fans and Fantastic Voyage and Alien provide decent arcade-style challenges. The non-movie titles are equally hit-or-miss, with games as good as Turmoil - an incredibly fast-paced actioner, and as bad as The Earth Dies Screaming - an incredibly slow-paced space game.

Fox also teamed up with computer developer Sirius Software (noted below in title list) to create four titles of little significance. They lacked the packaging flair of the 20th Century Fox titles but the games were as good, if not better, than their high-glitz brothers.

*Fox was about to enter the ColecoVision market when they realized that Coleco wasn't going to be around for much longer. The Fall Guy, Yolk's On You, and M*A*S*H would have come out for the doomed console around the same time the ADAM computer was being recalled. As a result, these three highly sought (and highly pirated) games can be played in their unfinished, prototype form.*

Profile: Trip Hawkins, founder of Electronic Arts in the 1980's, brought the concept of 3DO to the world in 1993. The idea was revolutionary: a conceptual design that could be used in multiple manufacturers' hardware, boasting 32-bit processing and multimedia functionality. Though 3DO is often associated with a specific console, they were always software people.

The 3DO unit wasn't quite the hit that Hawkins expected it to be, but to many gamers it was hardly a failure either. The technology was implemented by Panasonic, Goldstar, Creative Labs and Sanyo and featured over 250 pieces of software. Some of them were even good.

Long after the technology that 3DO was built upon had become obsolete, the company itself continued to produce software until the doors closed in 2003. Perhaps best recognized for the Army Men series, they were also the developers of the BattleTanx series, TOCA, and Cubix, as well as many others.

ABSOLUTE

Profile: Absolute was formed after Nintendo had made its mark in video gaming, but the company, which was founded by Activision alumni Garry Kitchen, produced a few Atari gems before they moved on to other ventures. Dan Kitchen and Alex DeMeo were also big names for this small company. Most gamers' favorite from Absolute is Skate Boardin' (or Super Skate Boardin'), a fast-paced race against time, with a tune that will stick in your head for days. All Absolute games were also available in Europe (distributed through Salu), as well as in Australia (through HES).

ACCLAIM

Profile: You'd be hard-pressed to find a company with more licenses acquired to created video games. Their game list may look more like a hodgepodge of popular personalities, television shows and movies, and unfortunately in this hobby, that's not such a great claim to fame.

Most of Acclaim's best stuff is the original stuff. We really enjoyed the 3D mayhem of Forsaken, the RC thrills of Re-Volt, and the completely unexpected addictiveness of No One Can Stop Mr. Domino. Unfortunately though, with a list THIS huge, there should be many more memorable moments.

ACTIVE ENT

Profile: Small video game publisher for the NES. Released arguably two (or 53) of the worst video games ever, Action 52 and Cheetahmen 2. Based in the Bahamas with a warehouse in Florida, Active appeared and disappeared quickly while only releasing Action 52 for two systems (one for Genesis and one for the NES). Cheetahmen 2 was produced but never officially sold via retail before Active folded. A SNES Action 52 was planned, along with other assorted junk that never saw - and never will - the light of day.

ACTIVISION

Profile: Pioneers and survivors are the men and women who have kept Activision running strong for so many years.

When David Crane, Alan Miller, Bob Whitehead and Larry Kaplan left Atari to form the world's first third-party software developer, no one could have expected it to have endured the ages and succeed across multiple eras and consoles. No one, that is, except for that original troop.

The name Activision appears on no fewer than 20 different game consoles featured in the Digital Press database, a number that no other manufacturer comes close to. And though there have been the share of duds over the ages, there have been an disproportionate amount of QUALITY titles, from the early Activision classics like Pitfall!, Keystone Kapers, and Kaboom! to modern classics like the Tony Hawk Pro Skater series.

AMER LASERGAMES

Profile: American Laser Games was a developer of Full Motion Video (FMV) games based in Albuquerque, New Mexico. ALG's most memorable game is Mad Dog McCree, an arcade light-gun shooter that appeared in the mid-nineties (and is, miraculously, now available on DVD). ALG ported several of their arcade games to the 3DO and Sega CD, which at that time were the only viable platforms for their laser-disc based games.

At the time, CD-based FMV was in its infancy, and ALG's pioneering efforts in this regard are commendable. However, when most gamers think of ALG, atrocious acting probably comes to mind first. Every character in their games seems to feel the need to prepare the player to be shot at, either through uttering a strange phrase or screaming. Unmotivated behavior abounds; your female partner in Crime Patrol suddenly shouts "Let's kick butt!" simply because the next FMV sequence is queuing up. Stereotypical dress and behavior are exaggerated, so the player will know whom to shoot. This may work in a typical 10 to 15 minute arcade session, but it becomes a painful experience when played repeatedly at home.

For some reason, ALG felt the need to develop a non-FMV game, and brought Mazer to the 3DO. Let's just say they did not become a big time publisher.

AMER SOFTWARES

Profile: A developer initially working with NES titles and later moving on to the SNES, PSX, and PC. Among their releases were Power Punch 2 (originally Mike Tyson's Intergalactic Power Punch, which was changed when Mr. Tyson... "broke the law"). The other is Treasure Master, the only NES game solely programmed for a contest. The contest essentially took place on one day where players had to enter two pass codes (8 digit and 24 digit), one on the game's registration card, and the other available on the play date (4/12/92) through watching MTV, a 900 #, or after the competition ended, through the mail. You would play through the game to reach "Prize World", where you would get the code to call in to try and win. Whether or not this contest was a success is something requiring more research.

AMIGA

Profile: Founded in 1982, Amiga Corporation is best known for the Amiga Computer that it developed for Commodore Business Machines. Before creating the groundbreaking graphics powerhouse, however, Amiga was an innovator in the field of both Atari 2600 hardware and software. Like many companies during the pre-crash era, Amiga's management personnel came from Atari. Jay Miner, who was Vice President of product development, was the designer of the game logic chips for the Atari 2600, and brought the kind of engineering experience Amiga needed to establish itself as a viable contender in the videogame and computer market.

For the 2600, Amiga Corp. only released two games, one controller and one peripheral. The Joyboard was a unique power body controller that transferred control of a video game to your entire body. For those of you who are familiar with the ill-fated Roll 'N Rocker controller for the NES, you get the idea of what the Joyboard was like. Two games were created specifically for use with the Joyboard -- Mogul Maniac, a skiing game, and Off Your Rocker. (A prototype surfing game, Surf's Up, exists in prototype form). The PowerStik joystick controller was an ergonomic and tiny controller that enabled the gamer to control the action with just one hand, and was actually quite a comfortable and effective controller.

More interesting than its released products, however, were a few of Amiga's unreleased products that never saw the light of day. The Power Module was to be a plug-in memory expansion module for the Atari 2600 which differed from conventional cartridge video games in that it used read/write memory (RAM) which can be changed, instead of ROM, which cannot be. Once the Power Module was purchased -- at basically the same price as one ROM cartridge -- the software was the only thing which needed to be changed, and this was to be done by loading games from inexpensive Power Play game cassettes. The only equipment required to load the program were the Power Module and any standard audio cassette player. The Power Module was to retail for $44.95, and was to come with two Power-Play cassettes, 3-D Ghost Attack (with 3-D glasses included), and Depth Charge. Other Power-Play games were to be purchased separately for $9.99 and was to include S.A.C. Alert, Strafe, 3-D Havoc and Scavenger Hunt with more titles that were expected to follow.

Just as the Power Module was to be delivered to stores, Amiga scrapped the device and instead decided to take a different approach. No longer a memory expander that attached to a cassette recorder, the Power was now going to be marketed as a super cartridge: one that has three, three, three games in one. The reason for this change of tack was cost. Since game cartridges were coming down so radically in price, there was no point in putting games out on cassette in order to make them less expensive -- at least that was Amiga's opinion. The multiplayer video game cartridges, called the Power-Play Arcade series, was developed using a proprietary switching chip that allowed the production of a 2600 cartridge with up to 32K of ROM. The ROM could then be used in any combination of 4K segments. These cartridges were to contain anywhere from three to seven completely video games in one cartridge, bettering the efforts of the Xonox and Playaround double-ender cartridges which were already on the market. Power Play Arcade #1 was to contain all 3-D games: 3-D Ghost Attack, 3-D Havoc and 3-D Genesis, with 3-D glasses included with the cartridge. Power Play Arcade #2 was to contain a series of family fun games: Scavenger Hunt, Eggomania, Gopher, Galleon's Gold and Word Zapper. Cartridge #3 was to contain a library of the older Imagic titles through a licensing agreement with Imagic. Negotiations were proceeding with other VCS publishers, and Amiga was all set to release the Power Play cartridges when they sensed the impending collapse of the videogame market and wisely chose to concentrate its efforts instead on the computer market.

In late 1984, Amiga was purchased by Commodore after developing the Amiga computer and the rest is history.

ARIOLA

Profile: The German media company Ariola, mostly known as a record-publisher, distributed at least three types of 2600 games. Firstly, Ariola was the licensed seller of Activision games in Germany. The Ariola releases can only be distinguished by the box. Their "International Edition" Activision games come in boxes about half an inch smaller than a regular size Atari box. The boxes have a yellow sticker on the front, with the German title and the text "Empfohlen von Hörzu" (recommended by Hörzu). "Hörzu" is one of the biggest TV-magazines in Germany. Ariola filed a lawsuit against Goliath for piracy of the Activision titles.

Secondly, Ariola was also the German distributor of CommaVid games. The games come in regular European boxes (half an inch taller than the US version) with a round sticker carrying the German name. Five of these were released.

Thirdly, Ariola also released games under their own label (though their name does not appear anywhere). Some of these games have been found in their original manufacturer boxes, like Boxen. These games have a serial number that look like PGPxxx. Ariola also distributed games with serial number TP-6xx. These have also been found in Holland and Australia. Unfortunately, the boxes of these games do not give conclusive information about the manufacturer, other than that the carts were in made in Taiwan R.O.C.

Furthermore, looking at the serial numbers on the games (PGPxxx), Ariola may also have been the distributor of the 4in1 BIT Corp. games. These carts with micro switches came in small generic boxes with a plastic window on the front side. The labels of these games do not carry a manufacturer's name, unlike the 4in1 games with the same serial numbers released in Australia. Those come in regular size boxes and have Bit printed on both box and label. Australian BIT also released other variations than have been found in Europe so far. Finally, it's also very tempting to classify another set of German games under the Ariola label.

The labels of these games are similar to Suntek and Rainbowvision, with "Video Game" written on the top part. The serial number, that looks like SP-2xx, is different though, and does not coincide with the Suntek numbering.

During the 8Bit-days Ariola distributed games from companies like Electronic Arts in Germany, and they were quite successful at it. In the heydays of the XL/ST they made up their own game label (mostly poor German adventure games, with one exception: Kaiser). But as the losses became bigger and bigger Ariola Soft was cut off from Ariola Music and became United Software. The company was restructured but the financial problems remained. They dropped their own development and became the exclusive distributor of Microprose. But in these days (1993 - 1994) MPS released lots of rubbish so the warehouse was full of games that could not be sold. United Software went bankrupt in 1995.

ATARI

Profile: The largest hardware/software producer for the first wave of videogames. Founded by Nolan Bushnell, this juggernaut created three notable home systems between 1977 and 1986 - Models 2600, 5200, and 7800. When Warner Communications purchased this small-time outfit from Bushnell in October 1976, an era was spawned.

By far the most popular system of its time was the Atari 2600 (released in October 1977), with nearly 500 available titles. When the competition (Intellivision, ColecoVision) came along, Atari released the 5200 unit. Despite its bulky shape and terrible, non-centering controllers, the 5200 eventually outlasted and outsold the ColecoVision. The 7800 model came a little too late, and Atari had trouble finding third party licensees with the Nintendo Entertainment system, a superior machine, gobbling up the developers.

As for the software from Atari, they were one of the best developers for each of their systems. Early 2600 games were outshined by Activision, who seemed to push the system's limitations harder, but over the long haul, Atari made some pretty good stuff. They also did most of the development for the 7800, even converting several popular computer titles.

It didn't stop there for Atari, either. Their stint as a third-party developer under Atarisoft was also quite successful, bringing popular Atari games to the Intellivision and ColecoVision systems. Atari finally called it quits with their 2600 & 7800 product lines in December of 1991. Over the years, the company has been bought and sold, with its most recent incarnation as a top-of-the-line title for Infogrames' new software. The name lives on...

AVALON HILL

Profile: Primarily known as a board-game company, Avalon Hill tried their hand at Atari 2600 games for a short time. While none of their games are particularly memorable, they should be noted as a company that made an effort to be different at a time when imitative and unoriginal games were flooding the market. You could play the super sleuth and solve a maze/mystery in London Blitz. Wall Ball is a 3 dimensional combination of Breakout and handball. Out of Control is a race through 2 dimensional space.

AVE

Profile: One of the few companies to defy Nintendo and produce unlicensed games - some of them actually quite good - for the Nintendo Entertainment System. Founded by Richard Frick, the company did a great job of outsourcing their titles and concentrated on getting their games into retail chains (which they did quite well). AVE even went so far as to offer NES owners a "mod" to their consoles to counter the lockout Nintendo was incorporating into their hardware. AVE stands for "American Video Entertainment".

BIT CORP

Profile: Bit Corp is a company from Taiwan. They produced a series of well-known and often-pirated games (The Bobby is Going Home range), as well as a number of 4-in-1 multi-carts. A Dutch book on classic videogames links them to several other 2600 brands, like Puzzy, Dimax, Funvision and Goliath. Now how are these all related?

Puzzy is a trademark of Bit Corporation. One plausible theory is that Bit Corp first tried to establish Puzzy as their video game label, like OnBase Co did with BOMB or Tang Electronics Co did with Sancho. But then they changed their strategy to have their games sold by different distributors all around the world under different names. In this theory the PG from the Bit Corp serial numbers could stand for "Puzzy Game". What remained for their own glory was an on-screen display of Bit Corp, a feature the distributors would or could not remove.

So far, nothing is known about the relation between Dimax and Funvision unfortunately. The link to Goliath is quite clear though. Their text label games were made using Bit Corp cases and boards. These games still display PUZZY on screen though.

There appears to be a relationship between Bit Corp and Telegames too. The cases that Telegames used for their silver label games are the same that Bit Corp used for their multi-carts. If you look closely, you can see the five holes for the switches underneath the label.

There are also ties between Bit Corp and many brandless games, like the ones sold by Quelle. They appear to have been manufactured by Bit Corp too, as the cartridge cases have Bit Corp part numbers.

But there is more, much more! The first nine games on the CCE release list are the same nine games that Bit Corp released. It looks like Bit Corp also produced the cartridges for CCE. The Zimag library also consists only of Bit Corp titles with different game names. Since the game Open Sesame has a sampled voice at the beginning in the PAL version, while its NTSC counterpart "I want my mommy" does not, it appears that the Bit Corp games are the originals, and that Zimag was just another distributor for Bit Corp. It seems very unlikely that enough space could be found in a 4K game to add voice for the PAL conversion, if the NTSC was the original.

Therefore, it looks like the Zimag/Emag/Vidco prototypes of Pizza Chef, Mysterious Thief and Fire Spinner are actually Bit Corp games that never got released under the Bit Corp label. Instead they later were released them under the CCE label in Brazil.

Bit also produced Atari 2600 consoles, the Amigo (aka Computec) and the Bit 7000. The Amigo looks like a Bit 60 home computer without keys. The expansion ports are still there though.

So, next time you think Bit is just another pirate company, think again! Thanks go out to Eckhard Stolberg for his thorough detective work. To finish, some more info on the multi-carts. These are found in Europe and Australia. The carts on these continents are similar, but not completely the same. Both types carry the name '4 game in one', same cases, same type of serial numbers for the individual games, and same type of switches. The Australian labels carry the name Bit and a serial number to distinguish the combined games, looking like CP4xx. The Australian box is also different: the European releases come in a small size generic boxes with a plastic window (either silver or the same color as the label), the Australian release in a standard size 2600 box, carrying the Bit logo and name. The European and Australian collection of games on one cartridge also do not completely match. The European version of the 4-in-1 games were distributed by Telegames in England and presumably by Ariola in Germany.

BRODERBUND

Profile: One of the few companies (if not the only one) to make games for the unusual combination of NES and VIC-20. Fun fact, eh? Broderbund, originally solely a game producer and publisher for the PC, later moved from game consoles onto PC productivity and creativity software. They released some of the more memorable games for the NES, including Guardian Legend and Legacy of the Wizard.

CALTRON

Profile: Little is known about the company that made the 6-in-1 cart, or the company that bought out their remaining stock, Myriad. The games involved seem to be developed by Megasoft, a pirate company from Taiwan. The company that was Caltron Industries has since dissolved, and has now turned into a LCD touch screen manufacturer. They are apparently unrelated to each other.

Profile: One of the major unlicensed producers of NES games. Camerica gave us characters such as Dizzy the Egg and Bignose the Caveman. When major retailers failed them, Camerica went to the Home Shopping Network and rental outlets with their games. All of their games came in a distinctive gold case, with a switch on the back to subvert the NES' lockout chip, if need be. Camerica is essentially Codemasters, a company still producing games today.

Profile: One of the many Brazilian manufacturers of 2600 games, and one of the more professional. They produced regular 2600 copies of some interesting titles like Krull, Gremlins, and Buck Rogers, as well as tapes for their Canal 3 Supercharger, which is an exact replica of the Starpath Supercharger (with a Canal 3 label of course).

CAPCOM

Profile: "Captain Commando" got its start with home consoles on the NES after starting with arcade machines. Early releases included games like Section Z and Trojan. Capcom created two of the largest franchises in the history of gaming: Mega Man and Street Fighter. Their collaboration with Disney also produced some of the most memorable NES titles released, including Duck Tales and Rescue Rangers. They still produce games today, and are one of the largest console game producers around.

CARRERE VIDEO

Profile: Another company to jump into the wild VCS market was Carrere Video Distribution from France. In Germany in the summer of 1983 they formed a joint-venture with Teldec Musik und Freizeit Service from Hamburg. Together with Tiger Electronics (of Tigervision, for which Carrere Video Distribution was the European distributor), they purchased the worldwide rights to make PAL versions of the VidTec/U.S. Games titles.

Carrere games have identical box and cartridge label designs as its US Games counterparts, except that they are pink-based instead of blue. The cart cases are Tigervision ones. Although some the titles were also sold in Australia, the majority of them were distributed in Germany and England. Carrere/Teldec also distributed the Amiga joyboard (with a PAL Mogul Maniac) and some of Sega's games in PAL format.

CBS GAMES

Profile: One of the best third-party licensees in the pre-Nintendo era, their gray plastic carts with yellow titles over a stark black label stand out in a collection. The games stand out, too. All of their titles for the Atari 2600 of a remarkable quality, and they also designed some of the best 5200 software available for that system. Their titles are a good mix of arcade translations (Blueprint, Gorf, Omega Race, Wizard of Wor) and original home games (K-Razy Shootout, Mountain King, Solar Fox, Tunnel Runner). John Madden was their advertising spokesman, and there is one unconfirmed release (Wings) in their library.

Some of the games were produced with a special RAM chip dubbed RAMplus which adds memory to the existing chip. This was evident in Tunnel Runner, which has many, many levels of maze-like corridors, and Mountain King, with its huge multi-directional scrolling playfield. Just about the entire line of NTSC 2600 CBS and Coleco cartridges were released in PAL format as well, thanks to CBS Electronics Europe. However, not all Coleco games - among them being the elusive Kid Vid Controller - made it to Europe. For Germany, special boxes with German titles were created, and for France, Smurfs (Rescue in Gargamel's Castle) was released under its native name, "Schtroumpfs" and in SECAM TV format.

Profile: Brazil-based company who released a rather huge amount of pirates for the VCS. Most of their games come in Coleco-style cases, bearing an imprinted CCE logo on the back. The artwork on the labels are original, but do not necessarily reflect the theme of the game. There are at least three versions of CCE games: black case with unique picture, black case with generic spaceship picture and beige case with generic spaceship picture. Not every title was released in all three versions. CCE games were sold in two types of packages, the regular Atari box and a plastic rack bubble pack. Finding the first is very difficult, finding the second is near impossible as you had to destroy the packaging to get to your game.

Interestingly, there appears to be a link between the Taiwanese Bit Corp and the Brazilian CCE: the first nine games from the CCE library are the main releases by Bit Corp. SEE ALSO: Bit Corp.

COLOR DREAMS

Profile: One of the major unlicensed game developers of NES games. Color Dreams, also known as Bunch Games, made original (bad) games, and imported Taiwanese and Hong Kong games (also bad) for release in the US. Their games came in distinctive blue or black cases - not green, that's Color Dreams' version of "Acti-plaque", or pink (as other demented writers have hinted at). Later, they produced games under the heading of Wisdom Tree, with games based on the Bible and Sunday school teachings. The bulk of Color Dreams' staff are now known as StarDot Technologies, producers of high quality webcams and digital cameras (www.wincam.com).

Profile: An offbeat manufacturer in many ways, from the shape of the cartridges they designed right down to the company name. CommaVid was founded and run by three physicists: Dr. Irwin Gaines, Dr. Joseph Biel, and Dr. John Bronstein. The unusual company name and logo (a comma with a television screen in the fat portion) originated from a quick change needed from their original company name, "Computer Magic Video". Think about it... COM-MA-VID. This small but resourceful group's commitment to be different makes their games stand out to this day. In fact, it's difficult to put many of their games into a known category, since the object and themes are so unusual. For example, in Mines of Minos, you guide a robot through a maze to find parts to make another robot, as the tunnels slowly fill with water. In Room of Doom, stand your ground as snipers fire at you from behind opening and closing panels in the walls. All of the CommaVid games except for the ultra rare MagiCard and Video Life were also sold in the UK and Germany, in PAL/SECAM versions.

In 2002 Classic Gaming Expo organizers John Hardie and Sean Kelly assumed the rights to all CommaVid licenses and copyrights, so who knows? Perhaps we haven't seen the last of this interesting company.

DATA ACE

Profile: Well known for their often terrible games, there are a few silver linings in this dark cloud of the third-party developers. Data Ace was great at marketing: they managed to sign one of the hottest rock bands at the time (Journey) to license for a game. They produced a severely overwrought promotional record with screaming actors and actresses "acting out" the themes of their earliest games. They even made their games look good on the packaging and magazine advertisements, but most 2600 owners were disappointed with the final product. They did manage to release a 3 1/2 minute free promotional "Mindscape" record, with bizarre eerie ambient synthesized tunes and moaning or screaming voices representing their video games.

Although Frankenstein's Monster is one of the best ever made for the 2600, and Bermuda Triangle is a pretty challenging Defender-clone, the rest are, at best, sub-par. To counter Frankenstein's Monster you have Sssnake, probably the worst game ever made for the 2600, and a few shooting games of little interest in Bugs, Warplock and Encounter at L-5. A company called Gameworld bought the worldwide rights of these games in the end of 1983 and released them overseas.

DATA EAST

Profile: Like Capcom, Data East got its start by producing such classics as Karate Champ and Burgertime for the arcade. They made out quite well by releasing an array of these games for the NES. Data East gave the NES 21 titles, and assorted other titles for the SNES, Genesis, and beyond. Data East exists today, mainly for Japan markets.

DIGITAL PRESS

Profile: One of the most outstanding producers of software in the 21st century

grin

Digital Press is known more for their historical knowledge of the video game industry, which is usually presented in some irreverent manner. Founded in 1991 by Kevin Oleniacz and Joe Santulli, the tiny but worldwide organization has produced 50+ periodicals, 7 books, a music CD, and yes, even a video game.

DIGITALPICTURES

Profile: The other DP, Digital Pictures was a California based developer of Full Motion Video (FMV) games in the early to mid-nineties. Their games were mainly of the "point and click" variety, and Digital Pictures would hardly be worth mentioning if it weren't for (a) the resounding failure of these types of games in the marketplace and (b) the absurd Congressional controversy surrounding one of their titles.

Digital Pictures' games first appeared on the Sega CD and the 3DO, which at the time were the only viable CD-based systems. Early adopters of the Sega CD, who were wondering in head-scratching fashion why they plunked down so much money for a machine that did little more than enhance Super Monaco GP, found their answer in the form of Corey Haim. It appears that Digital Pictures utilized a large part of their budget to acquire the services of skid row, but still recognizable, celebrities such as Haim, Dana Plato, and Debbie Harry. This was not unusual at the time; Dennis Miller, Shelley Duvall, and Mark Hamill were also abused by FMV. Apparently, these "big names" were intended to enhance the otherwise joyless "games" they appeared in. Consumers were not fooled.

Haim appeared in Double Switch, the toned-down sequel to Night Trap. The toning-down was necessitated by a laughable attack on violence in videogames by the U.S. Senate in 1992. The attack was led by Joseph "Almost Vice President" Lieberman, who called for such games to be BANNED! The specific targets of this attack were Mortal Kombat and Night Trap. Digital Pictures must have been thrilled; Mortal Kombat was already a smash hit and one of the most recognizable games since Pac Man, whereas no one had ever even heard of Night Trap until Lieberman brought it up.

Alas, Digital Pictures did little with their newfound fame. Their so-called fighting game Supreme Warrior and enhanced Sega Saturn version of Corpse Killer did not set the world afire, and Digital Pictures has taken their place among the other forgotten FMV developers. Modern day Haims and Platos will have to ply their trade elsewhere, perhaps in late-night infomercials on cable television.

DYNAMIC

-----------------------------	------

DYNAMICS

Profile: Dynamics' four Atari 2600 games were distributed by Dynamics Marketing GmBH, Hamburg, Germany.

Laser-Loop, Orbit Base and Break Down come in Bomb cases. Jumping Jack, the final release, comes in an Imagic-style case with a grip. The colorful Dynamics boxes also remind of Imagic, with a (cardboard) tray, holding the cartridge, that slides out of the bottom side. The instructions consist of a set of small cards in three languages (German, English, French).

Dynamics was into hardware too. They distributed their own version of the Starplex Game Selex cartridge switcher. Dynamics was also the company that sold the legendary Competition Pro joystick. Fun fact: Dynamics had a sister company in England which sold the same products, but of lesser quality than the German equivalent. They were rivals on the German market. The English products were way cheaper but in the long term they gave up competition because of the lack of quality. Dynamics made sticks for all kind of game systems as well as for the PC, but they were not able to build another successful device comparable to the Competition Pro. Last sign of live was in 1995. To this date, Dynamics products have only been found in Germany.

EIDOS

Profile: Before their days as video game developers, Eidos was best known for their work in the area of video compression technology. In October 1995 the company acquired Domark and in April 1996 acquired CentreGold (which included Core Design and US Gold, the pieces they were obviously most interested in).

It's hard to see anything but "Tomb Raider" when you see the Eidos logo, mainly because in many gamers' minds that's really the only memorable character or franchise they've ever produced. We really enjoyed the innovative Fear Effect games, and the first Fighting Force title on PlayStation, but it seems the Lara legacy will live on for better or for worse.

ELECTRONIC ARTS

Profile: While EA only released a handful of 8-bit titles (for the NES), this company has become a juggernaut over the years. Buying smaller companies such as Maxis, and making some of the most valued franchises the gaming world has seen (Madden Football), EA has made quite an impact on gaming. Founded by Trip Hawkins, a former Apple employee, the company started initially with the Genesis and PC, and entered the NES market late in its life. Hawkins later left the company and formed 3DO, the producer of the 3DO technology and publishers of many other games including the Army Men and the Might & Magic series.

FAIRCHILD

Profile: A second rate electronics company that decided to half-heartedly produce the first home "programmable" videogame system in 1976. Good idea, shaky timing, but especially bad marketing. Fairchild realized that they could never catch up to the Atari 2600 and bowed out of the race sometime in 1980. At that time, a company called Zircon bought the rights to the system. All of the games for this system were produced by Fairchild but were marketed later by Zircon.

FROGGO

Profile: What's embarrassing about Froggo is not the fact that all of their titles for the Atari 2600 are duds, and it's not even the fact that they have a silly name. What's really embarrassing is that all of their games are rip-off variations of already released software. Bad software, at that.

Look at this track record: Cruise Missile, Sea Hawk, and Sea Hunt are the same games as Panda's Exocet, Sea Hawk, and Sea Hunt, respectively. They renamed Spectravision's Gangster Alley to Task Force, and took one of the worst 2600 games of all time, Parker Bros.' Amidar, and made it even worse in Spiderdroid. The last title for the 2600 is Karate, where two blobs battle it out in a not at all very exciting slugfest. This game was virtually robbed from Ultravision, who distributed it sparingly before packing it in.

What is interesting to note is that their two 7800 releases are quite good, and they are original titles as well. One regularly rumored title - Pyromania (for the 7800) is not listed here. Oh yeah, Froggo was also responsible for the "Cordless Remote Turbo Stick" (#TS-8008), a joystick for the Nintendo Entertainment System. I'm sure NES owners are stunned with its quality.

FUNVISION

Profile: A company producing Atari 2600 games that is still surrounded by mystery. Three versions of Funvision games are known to exist. The first comes in the typical V-groove case. These games come with a manual that credits a manufacturer called Fund. Int'l Co Ltd. The second version looks just like it was made by K-Tel vision as it has the same type of box, case and label. The third version comes in a Zellers-like box, albeit blue. The games have also Zellers-like labels, but there is a generic Funvision label beneath that. Funvision consoles have also been found, providing no further information about this firm, unfortunately.

GAMeworld

Profile: Talk about a company that would do anything to make a quick buck. Shortly after Data Age went into bankruptcy due to a substandard library of titles and royalty payments owed to the rock group Journey for their game "Journey Escape", Game World quickly snatched up the rights to the games and released them in Europe and Australia at discounted prices under their own label. Note that only the manual and label carry the name Gameworld, the box says Data Age International Edition.

Initially, however, it appears that Game World planned on selling its games in the U.S. as well. The company was in full force at the 1984 Winter CES show with products and catalogs on display. All of its titles were unchanged from the Data Age ones (including all packaging and artwork), with one exception. They renamed Journey Escape to Rock 'n Roll Escape for obvious licensing reasons. Note, however, that only the manual mentions this new name, the cart and box do not.

Another interesting tidbit surrounding Game World was that it shared the same address in Los Angeles, CA as Universal Gamex... the company that is responsible for the adult game X-Man! It is conceivable, therefore, that after X-Man failed to make a dent in the marketplace, Gamex decided to change its name and release mainstream titles at deeply discounted prices. But it is also very conceivable that Gamex was an under-the-counter videogame outlet of Spectravideo/vision, since the case and PCB of X-Man are from this company.

GCE

Profile: General Consumer Electronics was founded in 1980 by former Mattel Electronics officials. Shortly after having released watches and calculators that doubled as video games, they decided to try their hand at home video gaming. Their inspired effort, the Vectrex, is a home gamer's dream, as it doesn't require the dedicated use of a television set. The built-in 9" screen displayed monochrome vector graphics, which made it one of the most bizarre and amazing videogame systems to this date. It's obscurity however, as well as the small library of available titles, weren't the right mix for good sales. GCE sold the business to Milton Bradley in the spring of 1983, after less than a year in the field. Many believe that had GCE hung on, they may have profited from the experience.

All of the software for the Vectrex bears the GCE label (in the US), although some of the later titles (Polar Rescue, Pole Position) were actually distributed by Milton Bradley. Some of their games were based on arcade translations (the best of them being Star Castle, Pole Position, and Armor Attack), while others were very original - and imaginative - uses of 3D vector graphics. There was a token game in just about every category: Sports: Blitz! & Heads-Up Soccer; Maze Game: Clean Sweep; Driving Game: Hyperchase; Jumping Game: Spike, Simulation: Polar Rescue; Pinball Game: Spinball.

When Milton Bradley discontinued the line of Vectrex hardware and software, they returned all rights to the original designers, Smith Engineering. Incredibly, Smith Engineering allows the duplication of Vectrex software for non-profit enterprises. Also see Vectrex.

Profile: This distributor (and manufacturer/publisher of videogames for various systems) released versions of games by Activision, Spectravision, Epyx, Imagic, Bomb and other countries in Europe (mainly Germany) and Australia. In the latter, HES carts were distributed out of Sydney throughout the 1980's and even into the early 1990's. HES are best known for their PAKs: multi-game cartridges with 2 to 5 games on each cartridge. These Paks began as Taiwanese rip-off carts (e.g.. Alien Force / Hoppy) but soon they were releasing multi-game carts with fully licensed games. The games on the multi-game cartridges are selectable via an on-screen menu after turning on the system. HES released one game of their own: My Golf.

Usually HES games are enclosed in Activision cartridge cases, but the labels are quite different from the games they are derived from. On the label there is usually the original company name, but on the back of the boxes you will always find the HES company name and address. Most HES games ended up in big plastic boxes which somewhat resemble VHS tape boxes. The large multi-game PAKs come in even bigger plastic boxes. The 2 PAK Specials and a number of single games were released in regular cardboard boxes.

HES stands for "Human Engineering Software".

Hi-Score

Profile: Hi-Score is a registered trade mark of Action Hi-Tech Australia PTY.LTD. Hi-Score games come with labels picturing the infamous pirate skull cave. The Zellers' game Inca Gold carries the same label. Cases, labels and fonts used by Zellers resemble the Hi-Tech ones, so there may be some connection. Other Hi-Score labels include a Yar, Saturn Rings, Flying Saucers or 4in1 picture. Identification of a Hi-Tech game is only possible by its box, the label and manual (a big word for a small piece of paper) show no manufacturer name.

HOT SHOT

Profile: The label under which Goliath sold low-budget 2600 games, in 1984. They had a stand at the '84 European version of the CES, (the LET in London) Their games were sourced from other producers like Bomb, Dynamics, Homevision, Panda, Sancho, Suntek, and ZIMAG. Carts have a large label on front with colorful artwork that covers the entire label. A colored title is laid over on top of the artwork, which makes these labels stand out among most other pirate games. The boxes for these games were unique in that they all had the same design, with a punched-out hole that shows the cartridge label. Manuals are a simple piece of paper. Hot Shot also made some very cool demo carts, each containing six games from the Hot Shot library. The demo carts feature four LEDs that indicate which game is currently selected. Game selection takes place with the Atari 2600 turned on! Hot Shot games were released in England and Germany, and Finland (of all places!).

Profile: One of the giants of the industry during the "classic system" period, sharing high third party kudos with the likes of Activision and Parker Brothers. It was founded in the summer of 1981 with a crew of 9, many former Atari employees. Imagic's games were packaged in the signature silver box with the title background color representative of the system the game was for (for example, Atari 2600 games were in orange or red, Intellivision games were in blue, Odyssey2 games were in yellow). The casings were unique, too, in that they were the first to have an easy to handle "grip" that tapered at the edge.

*Not as consistent as a company like Activision, for example, Imagic has its winners, but also some real duds. Overall, the games are good quality. In another parallel to Activision, many of Imagic's games were variations on already popular themes: Quick Step is a Q*Bert imitation, Demon Attack is an early imitator of Phoenix (and sued for it, to boot!), and Shootin' Gallery plays a bit like Carnival. On the other hand, there are plenty of original titles by this company, and they had several unique games on different systems to add to the variety.*

INTV

Profile: In the humble opinion of Digital Press, the people that took the Intellivision off of Mattel's hands also made the best games ever for this system. Some of them are so good that they can stand right in there with today's big boys.

The software listing only lists those games that were originally marketed by INTV. Since they purchased Mattel Electronics, however, all of their games were also marketed with the INTV label later on in the Intellivision years. Note, however, that the licenses (i.e. NFL, USCF, NHL) were dropped and the titles were renamed more generically.

Most of the INTV carts are originals and lots of fun, although three (Dig Dug, Pac-Man, Pole Position) are arcade conversions. The sports titles improved on earlier efforts by allowing solo play and adding features galore. As mentioned earlier, games like Body Slam!, Super Pro Football, and Stadium Mud Buggies still play well by today's standards. In Hover Force, you can pilot a helicopter to put out fires and blow away enemy copters. In Thin Ice, you're a penguin negotiating a Qix-like arcade challenge. Diner is the 3-D sequel to Burgertime. Tower of Doom is a Dungeons & Dragons style game that actually improved on the game play of earlier AD&D titles by Mattel. Triple Challenge is Mattel's Checkers, USCF Chess, and APBA Backgammon all rolled into one cart.

INTV released their one and only NES title, Monster Truck Rally, before folding in 1991.

ITT FAMILY GAME

Profile: ITT Family Games is a subsidiary of ITT Schaub Lorenz, formerly a major player in the European consumer electronics industry. They produced a number of games (mostly licensed copies) with very nice cartridge labels and cover-art for the white plastic VHS tape-type boxes (although Alien's Return, Meteor Defense, and Peter Penguin have been found in cardboard boxes.) Their prime target was the German market. They produced three games that had a tie-in with the popular comic book gnome (at least in Germany, anyways) "Pumuckl". Another tie-in was with a comic space hero "Perry Rhodan" who appeared in a sci-fi magazine. When their games did not garner the interest of gamers that they had hoped for, ITT made a desperate attempt to sell some of their games for half-price through their High-Score Club. They were unsuccessful in this method as well, and this resulted in the low production rate of their later games. Too bad, we really would've liked to have seen "Pumuckl II". Most ITT games are clones or rip offs from Homevision and R.J.P.G. games. It is not known if these games were licensed to ITT. There has even been sightings of ITT labels being glued over a Homevision cartridge label.

Profile: Yet another game developer who made games from the NES to the N64. During the NES times, Kemco (Kotobuki System Co., Ltd), and Seika Corporation merged their US office at first to distribute more games. Best known for their Infocom ports such as Shadowgate and Deja Vu. Seika has apparently dropped their games end (being a rather huge conglomerate), while Kemco still makes games today.

Profile: This company was primarily known for its electronic "toys" before they released the Intellivision in the late 1970's. Aggressive marketing, creative programming, and solid foundations made their products part of a force to be reckoned with.

As a software manufacturer, Mattel knew how to push the right buttons. Their initial releases for the Intellivision were considered ahead of their time, with sophisticated sports games serving as the nucleus of their marketing strategy. Mattel didn't go after the third party licensees at first, which further proves their ability. Even after they did acquire such heavy hitters as Parker Brothers, Imagic, and Activision, Mattel continued for the most part to release fresh games - not coin-op translations - to Intellivision owners.

Their color-coded game packages signified the Action Series (Red), Space Series (Dark Blue), Sports Series (Light Blue), Gambling Series (Green), Strategy Series (Purple), and Learning Series (Dark Yellow). They also manufactured two different Intellivision consoles, the Intellivoice Module which provided speech synthesis, and a computer keyboard and music keyboard for the Intellivision II.

George Plimpton was their spokesman in their heyday, and some of their advertising must have really hurt Atari. In a side by side comparison stating "Two pictures are worth a thousand words", Mattel ran a two page ad that showed Atari's anemic Home Run against Mattel's Major League Baseball. The contrast is shocking.

The company entered the realm of game publishing for the NES briefly, releasing the worthless Power Glove and subsequently returning to the toy sector. They also did a majority of NOA releases in Europe.

		MILTON BRADLEY
		Profile: Having failed with the Microvision (the first programmable cartridge-based handheld in history) and struggling with the Vectrex game console at the time, toy giant Milton Bradley hoped that becoming a third party 2600 publisher would prove to be a safer bet for succeeding in the

videogame industry.

In the summer of 1983, the company introduced two video game peripherals, the Flight Commander and Cosmic Commander, with each model being sold with accompanying cartridges, Survival Run and Spitfire Attack, respectively. The Cosmic Commander has the look and feel of a machine gun, complete with barrel gun sight, firing button and two-handed operation. The Flight Commander simulates the experience of flying a fighter plane. Players see control gauges flash and experience vibration feedback while firing the guns in both games. Unfortunately, both controllers were nothing more than gimmicks and didn't enhance the game experience any more than a joystick already did (both games were also playable with a regular joystick). Furthermore, they were constructed of cheap plastic, making them prone to break.

Its games did not fare much better. Survival Run is a first-person shooter that has you flying through a large maze searching for the end. Its uninspired graphics and choppy game play will immediately turn most gamers off. In Spitfire Attack, you take control of a plane and must destroy anti-aircraft guns and ammo dumps as well as enemy planes. Again, the game was boring and offered nothing new.

Milton Bradley also briefly collaborated with Atari on a voice recognition module for the 2600 and 5200. Atari was apparently impressed enough with what the company had done with the MBX (TI 99-4/A's voice module) and signed an agreement where Milton Bradley would develop the peripheral and Atari would market and distribute it. In addition, Atari planned on releasing several games for the device. The Voice Commander, as it was dubbed, never took off as Atari canceled the project midway during development. Milton Bradley subsequently sued Atari for breach of contract. Their relationship was not completely fruitless however, as Milton Bradley developed the Space Age Joystick for Atari later on. MB was also the European distributor for the Vectrex, which had little success there either.

Profile: A mainstay game company producing games from the NES to the PlayStation, Mindscape adapted many Atari games to the NES (Paperboy, Roadblasters) and published many crappy movie license titles early on in its history. They're still around today, mainly sticking to educational software. This company also brought the masses the Miracle Piano.

MYSTIQUE

Profile: In the early 1980's, everyone was jumping onto the bandwagon of the Atari 2600's success. Eager to cater to an adult audience, a company called Mystique was born. Mystique was actually the "trade" name for a larger outfit called American Multiple Industries out of Northridge, California.

Mystique created three pornographic videogames. If you can't imagine such a thing on a machine with such limited graphic capabilities as the 2600, actually seeing the games won't really help. Of the three games, Custer's Revenge - one which promotes rape and dehumanizes the American Indian - raised the most controversy. This controversy probably brought more business Mystique's way than they deserved... Over 300 angry demonstrators representing American Indians and Women's Rights turned up at a trade show in Manhattan where Custer's Revenge was being demoed.

Truthfully, none of their games were all that bad. Bachelor Party is merely a variation on the Breakout theme, while Beat 'Em and Eat 'Em is a Kaboom imitator. Only Custer's Revenge stands - thankfully - in a league of its own.

This is one of three X-rated games to be released by Mystique. Although these may seem tame by today's standards, at the time of their release they caused quite a controversy. Inside the oversized outer box was a fake leather case that housed your cart an

MYTHICON

Profile: Another interesting anomaly in videogame production, Mythicon's angle was to produce budget software for the Atari 2600. To say they were "too little too late" would be a gross understatement on two counts. In the "too little" department, their paltry three titles were absolutely inept, and two of them were rip-offs of one another - Firefly IS Sorcerer with wings and flowers. Each of their three games boasted to be the first in a series and thankfully no sequels were ever produced.

Mythicon packaging consists of a garish orange box with pretty decent artwork and the price of $9.95 displayed prominently in the corner. Here's where the "too late" part comes in: Mythicon released these games to the public about a day after the "Great Videogame Shake-out" began, making the public rather unreceptive. Most stores couldn't even move these games for $1.99, and Mythicon quickly became a faint memory.

The original boxes were printed with the price: $9.95, although within months the game was available for $.99. Look for the oddly shaped garish orange box with decent artwork on the cover.

NAMCO

Profile: Short for Nakamura Manufacturing Company. Right up there with Konami and Capcom as one of the biggest game developers ever. Namco is best known for Pac-Man and Galaga. They originally started with arcade machines and moved to consoles. At first, Namco licensed out their titles to other companies (Bandai, for example) with the NES, but they eventually took the first step towards publishing on their own and released Pac Man and Ms. Pac Man for the NES.

PANDA

Profile: One of the third-party Atari 2600 licensees that helped bring on the boredom that would eventually swallow the hobby in the mid 1980's.

Panda was well known for stripping down popular games, changing the graphics, and then pawning the new version off as their own "original release".

Most gamers saw right through this, but before Panda, Inc. went out of business, eight moldy titles oozed onto the store shelves.

Most of the titles were out-and-out rip-offs, but Dice Puzzle seems to be an original. Stuntman, though released in the U.S. without a similar game already on the shelves, turned out to be the same game that was being released in Europe as Nightmare. Another company, Froggo, actually re-RE-released some of the games that Panda had already aped ("worst ever" contenders Scuba Diver and Sea Hawk - can you believe it?). This is something you would never dream a thinking person would attempt.

PARKER BROS

*Profile: Most people equate Parker Bros. with their board games like Monopoly and Clue. We equate them with classics like Frogger, Q*Bert, and the Star Wars series on the classic 8-bit consoles. When Parker Bros. was on their own they did a terrific job with these licenses and many others.*

Parker Bros. was ultimately consumed by Hasbro, who kept some of their legacy alive in the electronic gaming community, but it seems we've seen the last of one of video gaming's truly great third party developers.

PLAYAROUND

Profile: A Saturday night without a date? Don't worry, Playaround has some software for you. Dealing exclusively in adult-oriented games, this New York based developer didn't pull punches. Their games are rude, crude, and lewd. You might think this isn't really possible on a system that could barely display better than blocky resolution, but the company did their best to make sure you could tell exactly what everything was. For the most part, they succeeded.

One thing that sets Playaround apart from many of the gimmick developers during this era (companies like Wizard Video Games or Mythicon, for example) is that their devotion to creativity made the games - gulp - fun. Yes, they can be a bit of a shock at first, but if you can overcome your inhibitions, you might find these games to be rather addictive. While there are some duds in the bunch, such as Westward Ho/General Re-Treat (a Custer's Revenge clone) and Bachelor/Bachelorette Party, there are also some fairly good ones as well. Xonox meets Mystique? That's what seems to have happened here. We're not really sure what the relationship between Mystique and Playaround is but there was definitely some hanky-panky under the sheets. Playaround did create some original X-rated games but

PSYGNOSIS

Profile: Psygnosis was a publisher and developer based in Liverpool, England. They began in the mid-eighties as a multi-platform developer, hitting their stride in the early nineties during the advent of CD-ROM technology. Although they developed a number of games for the earliest CD-based consoles such as 3DO and CD-I, as well as PC CD-ROM games, Psygnosis is probably best known for its popular PlayStation titles such as Wipeout and Colony Wars.

Psygnosis was already a prolific multi-platform publisher before the beginning of the CD age. Their games appeared mostly on niche machines such as the Amiga and the Atari ST. In the early nineties, they brought Lemmings to seemingly every machine available at the time, from Game Gear to Macintosh.

The company embraced the CD format early on, as is painfully evident in titles such as Novastorm and Microcosm. However, their early adoption of the format paid off when Sony issued the PlayStation, and Psygnosis became a leading third party developer for that system. Psygnosis was acquired by Sony and they formed a symbiotic relationship similar to that of Nintendo and Rare. Destruction Derby and Wipeout became early system-sellers. Wipeout XL, the Wipeout sequel issued less than a year after the original, was a significant improvement, defining a futuristic aesthetic that was highly influential over future PlayStation titles, and laying waste to the "bleeps and bloops" traditionally used as videogame music with an incredible techno soundtrack. These games defined Psygnosis' graphical style of slightly fuzzy, seemingly neon-lit colors, which is also evident in their other PSX hits such as Colony Wars, G-Police, and Rollcage.

Unfortunately, it seems that Psygnosis could not continue to innovate and sell on the PlayStation. The company's catalogue became inundated with poorly received sequels such as G-Police: Weapons of Justice and Rollcage: Stage Two, and critics savaged later efforts such as O.D.T. and (unfairly IMO) Blast Radius. Psygnosis was later absorbed into Sony Computer Entertainment Europe around the introduction of PlayStation 2.

QUELLE

Profile: Quelle is the largest mail-order catalogue business in Germany. They also run several outlet stores, mostly called FotoQuelle. They are comparable to Sears in the USA, with a similar product range. They have a huge range of branded products and they also have their own brands called Privileg (household) and Universum (electronics). Under the Universum brand they sold several pong machines and their own version of the Spectravision Compu-mate for the Atari 2600.

Quelle carried the 2600 in their catalogue from the start, listing the console at DM 379,00 and games at DM 139,00. As the VCS got more popular they got more and more games from most of the PAL-developers (Activision, CBS, Parker Bros, Imagic) in a price range from DM 59,00 (older games) to DM 139,00. Around 1985 the videogame crash arrived in Germany. For the consumer it was more like a videogame boom. Lots of carts went for about DM 29,00 and at this time Quelle came up with "their" games, a budget line with a price range from DM 19,95 to DM 29,95.

The boxes were made out of cheap cardboard (it's very hard to find them in good condition these days!). The artwork on the box is naive and colorful. The back of the box has a German description of the game along with a faked screenshot, as well as the product number of Quelle. The manual comes in full color and usually consists of four pages. Also included in the box is a Quelle guarantee card. The label has the same artwork as the box, the cart itself usually is marked with an "S.S." on the back.

There's still much unclear about the legal status of the games. All games are clones or cheap rip-offs of regular released games (most games have copyright notes from Homevision or BIT Corp.). The names of the games were just plain silly German translations of the English title or even randomly picked (for example, they used "Top Gun" at the time the motion picture was popular).

Besides their own games, Quelle sold four more varieties of pirate games to fill the need of the hungry public that couldn't get enough of these cheap games. It is hard to precisely classify these games, as exceptions to the rule are plentiful. Sometimes it looks like the people at the pirate factory were just randomly using cases, labels and boxes. Always remember that when you think you just stumbled upon a rare new variation.

The first type of pirate game sold by Quelle has gray or color-bordered labels, and similar artwork on label and box. The labels of the German titles (which also appear on the box) are in a rounded sans-serif font, and white, yellow, orange or blue colors (label variations do exist). These games also come in cases which "S.S." molded into the back of the case.

The second type of pirate is short cased. Titles are in English, and labels are black (like Suntek ones). Some of these (mostly the ones with the sans-serif font) were packed together in Double-Game Packages, a regular size box, containing two carts (two shorties or a short and regular sized one). The Double-Game Package boxes have an orange sticker in German and Dutch telling you "just purchased a product that cannot be returned".

A third type of pirate is a large-cased one with the typical V-groove imprinted at the top. Most artwork will instantly fill your eyes with tears from laughter.

Finally, Quelle also sold the German Bit Corp. titles (that do not credit Bit Corp on box or label).

RAINBOW VISION

Profile: Rainbow Vision carts are "A quality product from the Rainbow Music Group. Distributed in Australia by Rainbow Products Limited, Sydney Australia" (quote from the back of the box). That quality certainly does not go for the manuals, which are in typical pigeon English (good for a laugh though). These games were obviously manufactured in Taiwan. The games are rip-offs from several companies. Rainbow Vision and Suntek appear to have the same games, only the boxes differ. Rainbow Vision has been found in Australia only, Suntek in both Europe and Australia. What it looks like is that, in Australia, the games with number SS-021 and higher were released by Suntek only. Cases have the infamous S.S. imprinted on the back. Remarkable feature on the box is that it lists the cartridge number in 5 languages in the exact same way as on Goliath boxes, including the same font. There obviously is some kind of connection. So far, 18 games have been confirmed as Rainbow Vision releases.

RARE

Profile: Founded by Chris and Tim Stamper (UK), Rare Ltd. was originally known as "Ultimate - Play the Game" and designed games for the Sinclair Spectrum in 1982. Turning their attention to the Nintendo 8-bit NES, Rare Ltd produced approximately 60 titles for that system.

Rare Ltd. is well known for the NES classic Battletoads, Solar Jetman, and Cobra Triangle but they've had equal if not better success on later Nintendo systems with their ground-breaking Donkey Kong Country (SNES) and Goldeneye 007 (N64). Company website: <http://www.rareware.com/>

RENOVATION

Profile: Here's a company that has a loyal following, despite the fact that they never really had a "blockbuster". While others were looking for their place in the 16-bit market, Renovation, a propriety of Nihon Telenet of Japan, sought instead to be as diverse as possible.

From classic shoot'em ups like Arrow Flash, Gaiares, and Sol-Feace to role-playing games like Arcus Odyssey, Exile, and the Valis series, to quite literally everything in between. Examples: Dino Land is a video pinball sim; Gain Ground and Vapor Trail are arcade ports; Master of Monsters is a turn-based strategy; Granada is a top-down futuristic tank game; they dabbled in animated full-motion video games for the Sega CD with Road Avenger and Time Gal. We don't even KNOW what Beast Wrestler is supposed to be. Heck, they even licensed Jennifer Capriati for a tennis game!

As the 16-bit era began to close out, Renovation was acquired by Sega of America, never to be heard from again.

ROCKSTAR

Profile: Rockstar is a division of Take2 Interactive, considered the "top of the line" in that company's development efforts. There wasn't much going on with Rockstar, who produced some real mediocre titles until Grand Theft Auto III appeared on the PlayStation 2 and changed the way the industry looked at them. Basically, they looked like millionaires after that.

SEARS

Profile: Sears was "in business" with Atari during the heyday of classic systems. Duplicating titles to parallel the Atari releases for the 2600, if you didn't know there was such a company as Atari, you might think Sears was an incredible video gaming success. Their system, the Sears Video Arcade, is just an Atari 2600 with a modified shell design. They were able to release games whose license agreements were owned by Atari under their own name, in their own box, and had the option to use the title (which in the case of blockbuster games like Space Invaders and Asteroids they did), or use their own. What a deal! And all they had to do was give Atari a little cash.

A year or two later, when Mattel entered the field with their Intellivision, Sears smelled revenue and went after a similar contract. Remodeling the Mattel unit slightly, the Sears Super Video Arcade was available in Sears chains across the nation.

Surprisingly, only three original titles ever came out with the Sears name, and all of them on the non-super Video Arcade (Steeplechase, Stellar Track, and Submarine Commander). While none of these were ever likely to win an award, they were not bad games (er, maybe Stellar Track was...). Many speculate that these were early Atari "throw-aways", that Sears decided to release regardless.

SEI

Profile: A truly interesting company. SEI produced one unlicensed NES game, Impossible Mission II. The box for this game mentioned "For play on the SEI Entertainment System". Did this company produce or attempt to produce their own NES hardware? The company address listed also is now for a different company, so we may never know what this company intended (or what SEI stands for)!

SNK

Profile: SNK stands for "Shin Nihon Kikaku", which means "New Japan Project" in English. SNK had been creating great arcade games (P.O.W., Ikari Warriors, Alpha Mission) and even home console versions of their games as early as 1978. In 1989 they decided to enter the console wars and competed with the likes of Sega (Genesis), Nintendo (Super NES) and NEC (Turbografx-16). Their "edge", however, was the more sophisticated Neo-Geo system, which is actually a home version of their arcade hardware. For the first time, gamers could play the arcade games at home. Not a port. Not a translation. THE game. The 90's got considerably more difficult for SNK to keep up with the competition, and the high costs of both the console and the software kept casual gamers from purchasing. In addition, their handheld system, "Neo-Geo Pocket" was up against some stiff competition in the venerable and seemingly invincible Nintendo Game Boy. On Oct. 22, 2001 SNK closed their doors.

SONY

Profile: Before Sony became a game giant with PlayStation, they produced games for the NES, Genesis, and Super NES under the heading of Sony Imagesoft. They're responsible for many god-awful movie licenses (Cliffhanger, Last Action Hero), and released some classics as well (Super Dodge Ball, Solstice). I wonder where they are now?

SPECTRAVISION

Profile: A semi-popular videogame developer from the Santa Fe area, despite the fact that there wasn't a blockbuster in their catalog. In fact, Spectravision had big plans in the software business, a life cut short by the shake-out of 1984. Press releases and catalogs produced in the latter half on 1983 contain a bunch of cartridges that were never released (Cave-In and Galactic Tactic are among the missing, presumed dead).

Hooking up with the multimedia conglomerate CBS, Spectravision had a few games that were only available through the Columbia House Video Game Club - a short-lived venture that simply never found its niche. Too bad, because the decision to end the club makes the acquisition of four Spectravision games - Bumper Bash, Gas Hog, Mangia, and Master Builder.

A company obviously into original game design, there are some ideas here that still haven't been reproduced. How about this one: get rid of all the food on your plate. Give it to the dog if you have to, just don't let Mom see you! That's their game aptly titled Mangia. How about pinball with curved flippers? That's Flipper Slipper. And my favorite theme - you're a frankfurter with legs rescuing cats from a burning building (a nightmare after one too many Nathan's foot-longs? No!), that's Frantic Freddy.

Spectravision also has the dubious honor of producing what may be the best-known Atari 2600 rarity. The game titled Chase the Chuckwagon was available only through a special offer from dog food company Ralston-Purina.

The European division of Spectravision (of Spectravideo International Ltd. from Hong Kong) was crazy enough to release some of their games in golden boxes with translated German titles like "Kreuzfeuer" (Cross Force) and "Piraten-Schiff" (Gas Hog) and Super Baumeister (Master Builder). These two and Bumper Bash and Mangia (which sports a large "P" for PAL on the end label) were sold in Europe in stores and not mail-order exclusives like in the U.S. Chase the Chuckwagon never made it to Europe.

STARPATH

Profile: Starpath was, unquestionably, the most "cutting edge" company of the classic era. Their vision far surpassed anything that cartridge developers had in mind for the puny Atari 2600. 4K ROM cartridges you say? HA! Not at Starpath. The Supercharger adds 2K of ROM and 6K of screen RAM (to the existing - puny - 128 bytes on the VCS). Even though some of the giants of the industry had managed to squeeze as much as 8K of ROM out of the 2600 with extra memory chips in the game carts themselves, no one ever came close to the level Starpath pushed the 2600.

That is because they were the developers of the Supercharger. The Supercharger is a piece of hardware that connects an ordinary cassette player to the Atari 2600 and allows you to load games from the tape. In effect, this blew the gaskets off of any memory limitation the 2600 may have suffered up until that point. An inexpensive investment, the Supercharger was packaged with Phaser Patrol. A Star Raiders clone that just didn't look like Atari 2600 graphics, didn't sound like Atari 2600 sound, and played better than most Atari 5200 games. In all its glory, Phaser Patrol was just a taste of what Supercharger owners had in store.

First, Starpath went after the arcade classics with their own versions. New names can not hide the uncanny similarities - Communist Mutants From Space is a Galaxian clone with tons of options, Fireball is a big improvement over Breakout, and Suicide Mission is an Asteroids-like challenge that takes place in the body against viruses rather than in space battling rocks. Later, the company moved into more complex games. Escape from the Mindmaster is a five-level maze game from a first-person perspective, peppered with little arcade challenges along the way. Dragonstomper is a terrific first-wave RPG. All together, a dozen games by Starpath and not a dud among them.

A side-note on this company. They were originally called Arcadia, but ran into some problems as another company (Emerson) threatened to sue. Their home videogame system of the same name was around just long enough to overlap Starpath's venture. Better for Starpath that it worked out that way - they probably wouldn't have wanted to become associated with the miserable Emerson Arcadia 2001 anyway. Starpath's last move was to be bought out by electronic gaming firm Epyx, who closed their shop in 1983.

Arcadia/Starpath games for the Atari 2600 are on cassette tape and require the Supercharger unit in order to play.

TAXAN

Profile: When looking at game companies who primarily made games only for the NES, they follow two tracks: one fades out into obscurity, the other retracts to their parent company. The latter is the case with Taxan. While releasing such breakout games like Low G Man and Magician, this company retracted into their parent company, Kaga Electronics, after the NES era had ended.

At it's core, all of those games starred the Japanese character Kunio and followed his wacky adventures. Technos has recently revived itself from the beyond to produce more games and has an American arm as well, appropriately titled "American Technos".

TIGERVISION

Profile: Tigervision, a division of Tiger Toys, took a stab at the Atari 2600 market for a short time. Before entering the software publishing business, Tigervision was already an established producer of hand-held videogames. Its games are favorites among collectors because of their flashy artwork in their packaging and the high quality of their glossy cartridge labels.

Tigervision's game library was comprised mainly of virtually-unknown coin-op and semi-popular computer game licenses (with the exception of Miner 2049er, which was a monster hit on all systems). River Patrol, Espial and Polaris are about as obscure as you can get when it comes to arcade games.

Following its 2600 days, Tiger continued to pump out handheld games (usually based on major licenses), and even released a handheld game system called the R-Zone in 1991. And in 1997, they brought out a Gameboy competitor called the Game.com which was, to put it mildly, a mediocre performer in the marketplace at best. Tiger is now wholly owned by Hasbro International and has recently used the Atari license to bring out LCD and keychain games based on Atari classics such as Breakout and Centipede.

Several of Tiger's games include obscure coin-op conversions like the shooter Espial and submarine classic Polaris. There's also a few "clone" games: King Kong is a poorly made Donkey Kong clone, Springer plays a bit like Atari's Kangaroo, and Threshold is similar to the REALLY really old Astro Fighter.

Of particular interest to the collector's sect is the title River Patrol, one of the rarest games for this system. It inhabited store shelves for such a short time that even frustrated owners that wanted the game couldn't find it for long. Springer is almost as rare, but it spent a goodly amount of time in the bargain bins for $4.99.

UBI SOFT

Profile: Ubi Soft was formed in 1990 in Montreuil, France as a small developer but quickly caught the eye of the industry in 1994 with the release of their game Rayman, a technological wonder with superb play mechanics and - gasp - a personality!

In 1996 they teamed up with several large publishers, including Warner Brothers Interactive (on Batman) and Disney (on Donald Duck, Jungle Book and others) and by 2000 had created a legacy all their own. They further acquired Red Storm (who is best known for their Tom Clancy book-to-game translations), TLC GAME Studios, and Blue Byte Software.

It seems the best is yet to come with Ubi Soft, who proves to be a stronger presence year after year. We took note all over again when they produced Tom Clancy's Splinter Cell, a remarkable game in many areas, from attention to detail to outright graphic mastery.

ULTRA

Profile: Ultra is Konami. In an attempt to (successfully) circumvent Nintendo's restrictions on the amount of games that could be released by one licensed company a year (An effort by NOA to keep game quality to its highest), Konami made the Ultra games group, and released games through that outlet. Clever.

ULTRAVISION

Profile: Not content with merely revolutionizing the home arcade/video field at the 1983 Winter CES with their newly introduced, self-contained home entertainment system, Ultravision also brought excitement of Ultravision-designed games to owners of the Atari 2600 [sarcasm off].

Its first 2600 two titles, Condor Attack and Karate, were hardly ever seen in stores due to a poor distribution network, and it was just as well -- both games were horrid examples of a company in the business to make a quick dollar. Condor Attack was a pathetic Galaxian clone that substituted aliens with birds, bats and spiders. Karate's graphics are so poor that you might be mistaken to think that you're witnessing two hangman figures playing patty-cake. Several other titles were announced but never released, and for this, we should be forever grateful.

A few years later, the infamous Froggo Games decided to release Karate to a shocked public. Why would they choose to copy one of the worst games ever made? And K-Tel Vision picked up Condor Attack and released the game as Vulture Attack for the European and Canadian markets to a disinterested gaming audience.

With its horrendous games along with a vaporware machine that was to be the only self-contained, video game/TV/personal computer system, Ultravision should have been the joke of the industry. But because just about every other company sunk along with them, nobody was in the mood for a good laugh.

UNIMEX

Profile: A German distributor that sold the VCS in Germany back in 1979 as the "Atari VCS 800". They also distributed the Starpath Supercharger and the complete range of games for this system in Germany. Later they would sell the "Unimex Duplikator" (also see 2600 Hardware section), a game copying device not unlike the Vidco device or Yoko Game Copier (the EPROMs were rewritable, unlike the Yoko GameCopier, however). Of all the copiers, this one has great looks too: it resembles a woodgrain VCS, cut in half, with two card slots, and a button.

US GAMES

Profile: Here's another example of an "outsider" getting in on the video game craze of the early 1980's. US Games is a subsidiary of Quaker Oats - the same guys that make breakfast treats. Even with this background, US Games was successful in this industry. They started out in 1982 with the corporation name of Vidtec on the box, instructions, and game label, then switched to US Games late in the year. The box art became more colorful and the serial numbers "reset" when they released Gopher in 1983.

Some interesting concepts abound in their game library. Bashing a rodent on the head with a shovel, heaving eggs at a maniacal bird, and gunning down parachutists (hey! Even that's against the rules of warfare!) was never more fun, yet this is the precise object in their games Gopher, Eggomania, and Commando Raid, respectively. There are a lopsided number of "panic" games (racing against the clock or overwhelming odds) in their library.

We love Towering Inferno, despite its obvious connection with the lame-o 70's disaster (film). Piece O' Cake reminds us of the "I Love Lucy" episode where she had to beat the conveyor belt to construct a series of cakes, and we'll never get tired of Entombed, where you run the risk of getting trapped in a subterranean maze - even more fun when you play against another player and only one of you can survive.

Most of their titles were distributed in Europe by TELDEC, under the name of Carrere Video. Artwork was similar, only the blue accents were replaced by pink ones.

WIZARD VIDEO

Profile: The wizards at this game company miscalculated on the video gaming public in several ways. First, they thought they could produce winning titles based on popular movies. This had already been proven wrong countless times by Atari. Second, they thought they could make "controversial" games work. Wrong again, the public just wasn't ready for blood in a game (hmmm. Sounds familiar, doesn't it, Mortal Kombat fans?). Lastly, they figured that they were talented enough to make their games sell even with limited advertising.

Two games later, Wizard Video wasn't producing software anymore. Their two contributions to the hobby are fascinating anomalies of the era, and not to be mistaken for good video gaming. About the only positive thing you can say - they stuck to the script! In Texas Chainsaw Massacre, you run back and forth with a chainsaw trying to mow down helpless victims. In Halloween, attempt to save children from a knife wielding homicidal maniac. Both are bloody, but not much fun.

WORKING DESIGNS

Profile: "Our games go to 11!"

Working Designs is what you may call a "gamer's" publisher. While they don't have the name recognition of a Capcom or a Konami, the California-based company has cultivated a reputation of excellence among hardcore players, and their games reach collectible status seemingly instantly and by default.

Working Designs made their bones on the Sega CD, bringing legitimacy to the system with titles such as Lunar: The Silver Star and Popful Mail. Although they developed the legendary Saturn RPG Dragon Force, Working Designs had a publicized falling-out with Sega, and wisely turned their attention to the PlayStation. The PlayStation version of Lunar came as a collectible boxed set with much fanfare.

Working Designs' favorite sport appears to be taking Japanese games that the bigger publishers won't touch into the American market. Through their "Spaz!" label, Working Designs brought several quality Japanese shooters to the PlayStation, including Raystorm and Thunderforce V. But their specialty is RPGs. Consistent with their unconventional nature, they brought over the massive (and massively priced) Arc the Lad Collection to the PlayStation at a time when the PlayStation 2 was already available.

XONOX

Profile: A company thought by many to be an innovator in that their initial cartridge design, the "double ender" was both economical and inventive. Economical and inventive it may be, but it was not Xonox's idea. The first company to produce double-ended software for the Atari 2600 was a company called Playaround, who dealt in adult home video games. But that is another subject. In fact, Magnavox really "invented" the double-ender years earlier on the original Odyssey system, with one card (#9/#10) representing two ROMs.

Xonox was a division of K-Tel, the corporation that brought us so many bad disco albums in various compilations that their name has become synonymous with cheap products. Xonox had that same "cheap" edge. It's hard to put your finger on it, but the games seem rushed, with few exceptions.

Artillery Duel is a classic PC game that had been seen on practically every home system of this era. Xonox's version is true to the original. Their best titles are Ghost Manor and Spike's Peak, which appear on a fairly common double-ender. In Ghost Manor, there are four challenging screens to conquer as you attempt to negotiate an evil castle. In Spike's Peak, more multi-screen action awaits as you scale to the top, avoiding everything from falling rocks to sneaky bears. Another bad combination was of B-star Chuck Norris lending his name to a martial arts game (Chuck Norris Superkicks). But one of the worst ideas Xonox ever had was to create an all-text game on the cutting edge game system of its time, the ColecoVision. It was called - most inappropriately - It's Only Rock & Roll. Only three of these double enders were released in Europe, of which in Germany they were quite common.

forever, to I Want My Mommy, a children's game that concludes after completing just two screens. Fortunately in less than a year, Zimag was back to producing just the cheapo-video tapes and cassettes that had been their bread and butter before their dismal venture into electronic gaming. ZIRCON Profile: The manufacturing company that took over the production of the Fairchild Channel F game console and software development in 1980. Zircon saw their chance to cash in on the swell of video game consumers by re-releasing the grandfather of home consoles. They improved the original model, retailed it at a competitive price, and even offered it as an "upgrade" to current owners, but it just wasn't enough. The Channel F, with its sub-standard resolution and sound was already an antique in most consumers' minds.

Profile: Many game companies in 1983 were set up simply because video games were such a large market that if you had the resources, you couldn't possibly lose money. Well, that was true UNTIL 1983 - when the market was so flooded with mediocre games like those from this magnetic-tape turned video game producer that the consumer simply packed up and left the hobby.

Zimag was gone almost as soon as they appeared, their four paltry titles a testament to their staying power. Only Tanks But No Tanks, with its flickery graphics and inconsistent sprite collision detection belongs off of a "Worst of the 2600" list. The others are a pathetic combination of bad programming, dull graphics, and just plain boring games. The apathy goes from Cosmic Corridor - a claustrophobic space shooter that you can play

Even at 512 pages, we STILL couldn't cram in all of the manufacturer listings and other appendices that we had wanted to include in the Seventh Edition of the Guide.

Rather than give our devoted readers a hernia from lugging around a 750 page volume, we decided to publish the overflow content of the Seventh Edition Guide in this handy-dandy book. Enjoy!
