

Hosta

As the most popular perennial for the shade, hostas offer an amazing palette of colors, sizes, textures, and flowering performance. They are indispensable in the garden and also look great in large containers or troughs. All of our hostas are hardy in zones 3-9. Visit www.WaltersGardens.com for growing information.

HOSTA VIRUS TESTING

Walters Gardens, Inc. stands behind its product and guarantees that all plants are healthy and true-to-name. With hosta, this means much work in sampling and virus testing to ensure that customers receive the best quality plants possible. We believe this extra care is essential to maintain the high level of trust we have built over so many years.

Our plant health department has known about and has been protecting our customers from Hosta Virus X (HVX) as well as other viruses in hosta since before it became a prevalent plant health issue. We virus-index all hosta varieties we offer with ELISA testing and have been proactively working to maintain clean stock. New varieties are virus indexed as they are brought into production and are re-indexed on a set schedule. For more information about our virus-indexing program, see p. 11. To learn more about HVX and its symptoms, please visit www.hostalibrary.org/firstlook/HVX.htm or www.americanhostasociety.org/HostaVirusX.html

GROWING HOSTA IN EARLY SPRING

Please note it is normal for different hosta varieties to re-emerge at significantly different rates in the spring. Some will virtually explode from the soil while others are slower to emerge. The speed of emergence can depend on:

- Growing temperature. Hostas grown in a cool 40-50°F environment can take much longer to emerge than plants grown at 60-70°F.
- Length of vernalization. Many hostas require a full 10 weeks of cold temperatures (35°F) to grow properly the following spring. Plants not receiving the necessary cold treatment will take significantly longer to emerge.
- Cultivar/Species. Generally tokudama and fortunei type hostas emerge much slower than types with undulata, sieboldiana, plantaginea, and montana parentage.

GROWER TIP

For tips on growing and overwintering 72ct hosta plugs successfully, as well as a list of viruses we test for, visit www.WaltersGardens.com.
